Last-ditch effort by Vauxhall

By David Felton Labour Correspondent

Vauxhall Motors will this morning attempt to avert the all-out strike by almost 14,000 manual workers which is due to start on Monday morning. The three unions have been called to emergency talks when the company will try to reopen negotiations on the length of the agreement period covered by their 7.75 per cent offer which has been the main sticking point between the two sides.

It is likely that Vauxhall will seek to extend the period to 18 months, while the unions will be pressing for a 12-month deal running to their traditional September settlement date. Company executives will be heartened by the results of a secret ballot among engineering union members at the Dunstable factory in Bedfordshire which showed a narrow majority in favour of accepting the existing offer. About 900 workers were involved and the company will probably open the factory gates to them on Monday morning if the strike goes ahead.

News of the eleventh hour talks came as union leaders representing Ford's 44,500 manual workers submitted a claim for increases of between 15 and 16 per cent which would be worth more than an extra £20 a week. Ford will answer the claim on October 28. This morning's emergency

The man who was jailed for life for the "handless corpse" killing and who was at the centre of investigations into 11 murders in New Zealand and Australia, suffered a heart attack at Parkhurst Prison on August 12.

He was reported to have been prepared to name IRA gun runners who were using drugs profits to buy arms, and a second post-mortem examination was requested after a New Zealand MP described Sinclair's death as "extremely suspicious".

But the jury at the inquest in Newport, Isle of Wight, yester-day returned a verdict that Sinclair died of natural causes.

Sidney Draper, a fellow prisoner, told the inquest that he went with Sinclair to the prison canteen after he com-plained of feeling unwell. Minutes later Sinclair was laying on the floor. "It seemed to me that he was really choking badly for breath". Draper said. "This went on for a couple of minutes. Then it seemed to me his face did change colour. It took on a sort of bluish tinge. He was fighting for every breath". Dr William Kenward, a Home Office pathologist, gave the cause of death as "coronary thrombosis due to or as a result of atheroma".

Sinclair, aged 38, was jailed for a minimum of 20 years in July, 1981, for his part in the murder of Marty Johnstone, a key member of an international drug syndicate masterminded by Sinclair, Johnstone's muti-lated body was dumped in a Lancashire quarry,

The organizations' views are contained in their submissions to Mr Norman Tebbit, the Secretary of State for Employ-ment, in response to his White Paper on further union reform which will form the basis of a Bill to be published by the Government later this month.

The Institute of Directors expresses particular concern at the omission of any proposals to curb strikes in key public services. That would mean the unions would not lose immunity under civil law and the institute suggests that the loophole should be closed by insisting that individual workers should contracts rather than leaving it to the union.

The IPM argues that the insistence on compulsory strike ballots could result in demands for more time off for unions to consult with memebers at every stage of negotiations and "di-version of open strike action into underground tactics of

Navy says farewell to Chatham

In a sunset ceremony, the ensign and the flag of Admiral William Higgins, Flag Officer Medway, were lowered to signify the end of the Navy's Medway Command. The base will be rapidly run down and will finally close next March, with the loss of 7,000 jobs.

The Government's Property Services Agency is trying to attract commercial businesses to take over parts of the dockyard. A private company is expected to continue flag making in the old sail loft, bailt war, and the quarter-mile long rope works is also to continue in private hands. Tenants are being sought for other parts of the yard.

Unions have agreed to a plan that will save 1,500 jobs at the Portsmouth naval dockyard (the Press Association reports). It will come into force in a year's time when the dockyard adopts its new role as a fleet maintenance and repair base. The unions have agreed to a formula that will introduce

SNP goes hard on home rule

The Scottish National Party yesterday overwhelmingly re-jected the gradualist approach to Scottish self-government and voted to reaffirm its commit-ment to settle for nothing less than outright independence.

After a long and at times heated debate at the party's annual conference in Rothesay, the party chairman, Mr Gordon Wilson, claimed that he had been granted the freedom to continue his efforts to seek a joint approach with other political parties in Scotland towards self-government, but the mood of the delegates was overwhelmingly in favour of the hard-line stance.

Mr Wilson appealed for the party to reject the negative image which an "independent, nothing less" policy gave to the SNP. "It erects a division between us and the electorate.

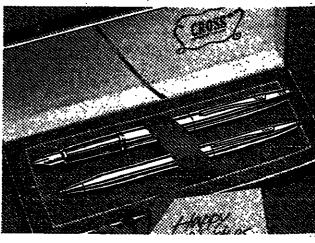

The party chairman's face was saved by a phrase in the successful motion which said devolutionary moves, but the conference did reject two amendments which would have allowed the party's MPs 10 support any devolutionary moves by other parties.

One of the turning points was when Mr Wilson's fellow MP. Mr Donald Stewart, the party president, declared his support for a hard-line amendment which would have deleted any reference to devolution.

Mr James Taggart, a national executive member, was cheered when he said that anyone ashamed of their belief in independence would be better sitting in a corner knitting or.

Martin took suicide. walk, QC says

By John Witherow

David Martin took a "suicide walk" when he was captured by armed police officers in the London underground last January, his defence counsel suggested to a jury yesterday at the Central Criminal Court.

The court was told that when Mr Martin was arrested on the underground between Hampsteed and Belsize Park in north London he gave himself up without a struggle, but refused to obey police orders to raise his hands as he walked towards them in the darkened tunnel.

Det Sergeant Nicholas Blenwell, who had his revolver trained on Mr Martin, agreed with Mr Ivan Lawrence, QC, for the defence, that "it was a kind or saided walk. These were circumstances in which it was liken he would be shot."

Mr Lawrence told the court that Mr Martin would have read in the newspapers that Mr Stephen Waldorf, "someone the police thought was him", had been shot and wounded.

The jury had been told earlier that Mr Waldorf had been shot in a London street on January 14 and that one of the officers involved was Det Constable Peter Finch who has since been charged with attempted murde: and is awaiting trial.

The Bill was presented on Thursday night by President Ricardo de la Espriella and political sources expected it to expand substantially the present force of 15,000 men

Opponents said the measure was rushed through before the Council ends its current session today and that it tipped the balance of power in favour of the military. The Christian Democrat Party plans to file a suit to block the Bill from taking effect, Señor Guillerno Cochez, the party leader, said. In creating a military with privileges that work against the functions of the executive and legislative branches, we are

THE ARTS

Wagner with a new touch of wit

Absent from the London stage for more than 70 years. Wagner's whopping grand opera of tyranny in fourteenth-century Rome is the perfect choice to start an English National Opera series, sponsored by Norwest Holst, in which neglected works will be presented. The idea is to save money by having cheap sets and a chorus who sing in serried ranks from their parts, so needing much less preparation. The effect is to present the piece more as a case than as a fully sufficient work of musical drama: after all, in order to qualify for this series, an opera must be deemed inadequate for the regular repertory. But Rienzi is indeed a case, and its slightly shoddy treatment here is realistic in a way that a totally committed production could not be.

The problems of the thing begin with its length. Opinions differ about how long an uncut performance would take: maybe seven hours. Nobody can be sure because the only complete score, Wagner's manuscript, probably perished in the flames of Berlin with its last owner, Adolf Hitler. At the Coliseum we hear about half the work, and that is enough for Nicholas Hytner, the producer, to make some striking observations about the opera that Hitler so much admired.

Hitler is reported to have been set on his path by a performance of Rienzi attended in Linz when he was 17, but if that was so, then Wagner's last immature opera was simply one of the lesser victims of his gigantic incomprehension. For Rienzi should be a warning to anyone of the meanness, vanity and wholesale destructiveness. of power achieved for its own sake, and a production done up on the cheap mutely but pointedly emphasizes this in its simple sets of fake lavatorial black marble, its elementary costumes and its meagre crowds.

Rienzi: Kenneth Woollam in the title role homage, but Mr Hytner's solution is very aptly and delightfully executed.

If however, Wagner was for a moment taken in by the persuasiveness of his hero even if, as seems likely, he identified with the son of the people come to cleanse the state of Rome - he was as a musician involved in a more complex manner in the story. The first two acts, which he contem-plated making into a separate opera as Rienzi's Greatness. opera as Rienzi's Greatness, march at the overweening pace of Parisian grand opera, with bandstand music broken only by wooden recitatives. But the second part, Reinzi's Fall, becomes increasingly more thoroughly and interestingly composed: one even begins to hear touches of Tannhauser and

Wagner's greatest sympathy, not for the last time, is with heroism in decline and death. heroism in decline and death, and Heribert Esser conducts a performance which effects the modulation in tione without being too pretentious about it Rienzi remains a pretty simple-minded piece, and Mr Esser makes no great claims otherwise. Nor do his singers. Wagner saw the hero as, like himself, a man of 28. Kenneth Woollam is rather more mature, but there is still a soft ring to his voice that is likeable, and clearly he has spared no effort in entering the spirit of the part. Kathryn Harries is fiery as his sister Irene, and Felicity Palmer as Adriano, torn three ways by loyalty to his noble family, love for Irene and admiration for what he take to be Rienzi's political ideals, is abundantly ardent and decisive.

The production will not be revised after this month's performances, so the opportunity should be seized to see

WEEKEND CHOICE

To nobody's surprise, Kenneth Loach's film The Red and the Blue (tonight, Channel 4, 7.30), a sequence of lossely connected impressions of last year's Conservative and Labour party conferences, shows that, when Stuart Owen's production, slow in the first act which is supposed to be Chekhovian, briny, the ideological and social pulls out the emotional stops in differences between them are luridly illuminated, as if by Lynn Webster, and the mur-derer, Blain Fairman, emote taught by Mr Loach's film (and and the adulterous train con- Labour conference as well as ductor (Colin Bruce), a nicely Tories preparing to pack their played cute humorist who is bags for Blackpool will be wise nevertheless not slain early to remember it) is that snooping cameras and prying microphones can pick up as much once on film, public foolishness can subsequently be the source of much private embarrassment. Fiona Shaw plays the postulant Little of the character's serenity and pain escapes her. The weakness of the story lies in the way the girl's intelligent commitment to her new spiritual role is too consciously counterpointed by the inanity of the guests at a family party given to mark her departure.

This in turn opens up the possibility - which his very effortlessness serves to underline - that having found a serviceable vehicle (bicycle, format and style) he is now more often freewheeling than

The occasional encounter has reinforced this impression: in Leicester he met a group of Indian teenagers who spoke to him with exceptional frankness about what they thought of their position in Britain - how, for instance, the Asians always get the unpleasant jobs. Suddenly, momentarily, the whole ambience of the series changed and it became obvious that Tom Vernon could, and maybe should, risk his balance on a much rougher road of human contact than he has been riding these last week.

What one of those roads might be was rather luridly

the rarer events of radio - one which, though it can only have been heard by an audience within 30 miles of Birmingham, was so enterprising and in some respects so successful that it deserves mention here. I am referring to the production of a 60-minute play by a BBC local station. Detention (September 30) was the first drama pro-duction from BBC Radio WM.

Written by ex-teacher David Calcutt specially for the station, it was set in a rough West Midlands comprehensive. Midlands comprehensive.
When troublesome young Kevin Blower is put into detention by the staff's arch
martinet and reactionary; when one of his companions is his friend, a Sikh boy, whose only offence has been to hit very hard an aggravating young racist when the detention is presided over by a probationary teacher of doubtful vocation and hysterical disposition and when he is joined in the detention room by the female colleague in whose bed he spent the previous night, then it

Female staff member tries the "I understand you" line and is predictably told what she can do with it; male ditto utterly loses his cool, and when Blower makes a last defiant gesture - standing on a window ledge - takes the opportunity to push him out. At this point I couldn't help feeling that Mr Calcutt was writing like a man who has chosen to illustrate a history of warfare exclusively with the bombing of Hiroshima. Dreadful things go on in comprehensives, I'm sure, but Detention was actually very much more telling when dealing with the daily round and unpromising attitudes of school

That it was not destroyed by its own climax owed much to that earlier authenticity as well as to some good acting, and to the direction by Tim Manning of Radio WM who was, I suspect, lucky to be able to call on the experience of Vanessa Whitburn from the Radio Drama Unit at Pebble Mill. All in all, quite a local feather in the

for bedroom 'bandit' From Christopher Mosey Stockholm

Ule Linde, aged 41, hit the jackpot yeuterday. After a ninemonth fight he persuaded the Swedish Government to let him have a "one-armed bandit" in his bedroom.

Under anti-gambling legis lation, such machines are illegal

Ulf, who lives in the northern town of Umea, wanted the bandit "for decoration only." After being repeatedly refused premission by various lesser authorities, he took the matter to government level and at special committee was convened to consider his plea.

One hurdle still remains, however the machine must be inspected to make sure it can neither take nor pay out money before it is finally installed.

Children's room

As the politics of the Booker Prize continue interminably to hog the literary limelight, I sing, diffidently, of The Other Award, celebrated this week at a public house (buy your own drinks) in Covent Garden. The Other Award was inaugurated in 1975 as "an alternative children's book award for progressive books of literary merit" on the ground that the more establishment Carnegie and Kate Greenaway Medals "show scant recognition of the social content of children's literature". Typical of this year's winners is Everybody Here, based on a Channel 4 series, a multi-racial farrago of fun and games making the point painlessly that children come in all shapes, sizes and colours. Raj, a Sikh, explains what Diwali means; black, yellow and white faces squash themselves against windows to look equally horrible; Muhammad Nurul Huque writes a poem in Hindi (Iranslated) about Petticoat Lane. I like it. Next year I'm going to buy them all a drink.

Birdbrains unite

British Birds, the venerable monthly magazine of ornithology, is to work a feathery variation on the Masquerade theme next month with the publication of a Mystery Photographs Book and the offer of a large cash prize for the earliest solution. The book contains photographs of 42 species and clues to the identity of a forty third. The winner will receive at least £1,000 and, depending on the sales of the book at £4.80, a maximum of £4,300. Dr Tim Sharrock, the managing editor, says he is the only person who knows the solution. In the event of my death, a sealed envelope will be delivered to my successor." The problem is rather like bird identification itself, ne adds: "If you think that you may ave solved it, you haven't. If you is solve it you will know for certain

Peter Potter of Antrobus, Cheshire, was served "diced cat covered in a rich sauce" at a banquet in Canton. After congratulating his hosts on the dish, he told them that his wife bred Burmese cats. What did she do with them? asked the Chinese. "She sells them." How much? "About 140 renminbi." Astonishment all round at paying £45 for a cat. "They must taste delicious!" chorused his hosts at last. Potter travels frequently in China, where he has consumed "bucketsful of sea-slugs". The cat, he says, wasn't half bad - but then it was free-range wild cat, none of your battery-farmed rubbish.

After panic scenes in Rio remiiscent of Weimar Germany, drazil's Central Bank has been forced to run newspaper advertisements denying rumours that it is buying in one-cruzeiro coins, worth i fraction of a penny, for almost £2.
In a country that owes $90,000m to international creditors, making it the world's largest debtor, people grasp at straws: in this case, a belief that the coins were minted mistakenly in white gold. Crowds have been besieging the banks daily; my correspondent does not specify whether the mobs are carting their cruzeiros around in wheelbarrows.

The mind boggles at the prospect facing Arabic Services, a London translation agency that is trying to render into Arabic P. G. Wodehouse's The Great Sermon Handicap. Leslie McLoughlin, its managing director, feels some sympathy for others who come unstuck in similar sentures: London Transport, for example, whose multilingual tourist poster extolling the delights of Green Line buses makes gibberish, he says, of the Arabic version and adds insult to injury by reproducing the Saudi flag in blue. In fact it is green, the true colour of the Prophet. no less than the buses.

Let's make councils really local

David Walker argues that present government parliamentary time, political energy and perhaps a drop of ministerial thinking does not go far enough to solve blood are going to be expended on rate-capping and abolition, two things which the Government seems the problems besetting the nation's ratepayers to see as a solution to the problems in local government. Yet the day after Islington's rates functions would produce a solid core are capped and the Greater London of activity about which there would Council ceases to exist, municipal little dispute - the maintenance administration in Britain will still of the civic infrastructure, environconfront the same array of questions mental health, public protection and as now: questions of cost, pro-fessional "servants" who rule their education, the alleviation of hardship and support of the infirm. masters, public apathy, and resent-Beyond that are some controversial ment at paying the bill for services. What will be needed then, as now, but justifiable activities such as public housing, the control of land is a fundamental review covering all use, and fire and public safety councils, from the lowest district to regulation. But do we need councils the mightiest county. It is a review as at present constituted to carry out that should first ask a single, simple question - one consistently ignored these functions?

The answer must be that the paraphernalia of "local representative self-government" is often unnecessary and sometimes a positive obstacle to the provision of services. According to the opinion polls the public wants services; according to the small voting turnout at local elections they are not much interested in councils.

There is surely nothing sacrosanct about the present system of local government. The forms of administ-ration could be adjusted for each service. In London, for example, it is ludicrous that social services pro-vision is divided up between 32 boroughs, whose boundaries mean nothing either to the elderly receiving help or to the staffs assisting them. The issue in social services provision, as in education, how best to counteract the propensity of a profession or quasi-profession (teachers or social

A thorough review of all council workers) to run itself without regard to cost or consumers. Council elections don't help provide the answer. A solution might be rigorous inspection, the devolution of budgetary powers to local "cost centres" - or a London-wide social services board, part-elected, part-

> At present there is a great fear in the local government camp of what is called hybridity, which basically means that what applies to one council has to apply to them all.
> Why should this be? London's problems of local government are specific to the capital: there is no reason why the relatively successful administration provided by Kent County Council should not continue while the functions performed by the London Borough of Islington are more efficiently dispersed.

The task for any reformer of local government must be, in some measure to restore power to the consumer as against the producer of the various services. The Government's plans for rate-capping and abolition of the GLC and the metropolitan counties are singularly bereft of any concern for the consumers. But steps could be taken immediately on a series of other

Why, for example, is there an annual wage round unrelated to measures of productivity and performance? Why is there no regional fact which at once destroys the basis of local (ie locally variable) govern-

Action could also be taken on monitoring tools. The recently created Audit Commission for local authorities is a start, but should be linked into the grants system, so that measures of effectiveness could be used in apportioning grants.

There is everything to be said for "mixed economy" of council ervices. Council employees, especially the lower grade manual workers, are often unfairly blamed for the sins of their mana who have built them into a system of semi-corrupt and wasteful practices. Liberated, they are probably often able to compete with private firms, as the experience of the Birmingham environmental health department has shown.

Lastly, diversity. In recent-years all sense of experiment and progress has gone out of local government, and one reason is the depressing uniformity often imposed by "professional" standards and precepts.

If central government were to lift some of its obligations, then local authorities might be able to vary their activities. Would it be so shocking if school buses were provided in one area but in another the job were done by a private firm, and in another by a parents' cooperative? If it means anything at all, local government means the state's functions being fulfilled differently in different geographical

The author's book Municipal Temple Smith (£8.95).

My wife is learning her native tongue. Only a fifth of her race can speak it and most of them speak English as well, by which I mean both "also" and "with the same fluency". At school she learnt only to count to 10 and pronounce place names so she is now making a late start with a copy of Teach Yourself Welsh bought secondhand in Ludlow, a fortress town built to keep the Taffs at bay. Not many miles west, you can hear girls at

My wife can tell a mere Welsh accent from a Welsh-speaker's, a refinement of the game all the British play of placing people by the way they talk. Now that Manx is extinct, only three such languages survive - Welsh and the two Gaelics - and it's only a matter of time for them. True dialects are going, too. Radio and television earn their charters by off-peak regional varia-tions but even local news is read in Standard English voices. My natural accent is the adenoidal burr of Bristol, a glottal version of Somerset, as Scouse is of Lancashire. Are they urbanized rustic or have they come about because both cities stand on estuaries with foggy climates that close the throat? Everyone in my childhood spoke Bristolian without knowing it and I had to learn Actor's Posh when I went to drama school in my twenties.

My father was a Londoner so I was already halfway to Standard English, a version of Cockney spoken by few but imitated by most and taken by foreigness to be twiced. and taken by foreigners to be typical English speech. The short "a", for instance, is pronounced "ah", making laugh "lahff" where the rest of us say "laff". The well-known "orff" belongs to both Poet Laureate and East End villain, while the rest of Britain says "off". Speech in Britain is more divisive than schools and an "ee" before the diphthong "ah-oo" making "town" into "teeown" was as fatal for Edward Heath as the three-day week. It has been said that Posh was developed early in the last century as a way of making the Hanoverian monarchs feel at home. Germans speaking English will certainly sound upper-class in such phrases as

"not too bad". Helmut Schmidt and Malcolm Muggeridge show there may be something in it. Of course, royals have evolved since the early Georges, the modern female line favouring the Mitford drawl, the males buzzing indistinctly, both resulting from the upper-class view that it's bad form to move lip or jaw. An American film star told me of the proud moment when he was presented to the Queen and Prince godammit!", he said, "I couldn't understand a single word they said. I just kept grinning and nodding hoping I was reacting right."

"Here was a thousand years

Venture into the

Babel belt

To be fair, Americans are lazy listeners. They know three British accents - Cockney (Stanley Hollo-\ way), Posh (Julie Andrews) and Scouse (John Lennon). In one of my plays in the United States, an actress used a dialect halfway between London and Liverpool not Birmingham but a weird Identikit that might have come from a malfunctioning word processor. Imitating voices is not a national obsession there as it is with us. In a country where everyone is trying to feel at home, mocking accents is frowned on. Chatting to each other on the beach of a lake in Minneapolis, we were approached by an inquisitive young man.

Hi - you tell me the time?" "Yes. Fah-eve and twenty pahst nah-ene."

"Five and twenty past? OK. You folks from out of town?" "From England."
"England. Where is that? Europe some place?"

"An island off Europe, yes."

"And do they speak English

"Well, you sure speak it well for a European. Thank you."

"You're welcome." He was not the only Minnesotan who failed to connect England with English bounces back at us in Aussie (Ctive James butch and Edna Everage genteel), babu Indian, the prim Dutch of South Africa, grandiose black of Zimbabwe, selfasserting patois of the Caribbean and Brixton. No wonder we are all mimics. It's more fun than stampcollecting (and cheaper) to tell the squeezed Scottish vowels of Canada from the mandarin monotones of Boston. Anyway, what's the alternative? We watch the punch-ups our language suffers as Japanese, Russian and European take it - one after another - up a dark alley and beat hell out of it. But at least they're trying. Since Henry the Fifth, British soldiers spending years in France have come back with not much more than Parleyvoo and Wipers.

I hope my wife perseveres with her Welsh. After all, Lee Kuan Yew, the Prime Minister of Singapore, a Cambridge graduate, had to learn Cantonese when he came to power. Not that anyone in his right mind would neglect his English, once acquired. Barry Humphries, when told of the decision to teach Indonesian in Australian schools at the expense of the mother tongue, smiled wearily. "How sensible, yes. And what a wealth of Indonesian literature awaits the poor dears!"

Three farmers, an Englishman, an Irishman and a Frenchman, settle themselves into a Strasbourg restaurant - Strasbourg, we are at once reminded, is the town where they stuff geese for foie gras. Our farmers are obviously about to do themselves extremely well. At our expense, we are told. This is the opening of a Panorama report:

'Farmers we can't afford". Now, in these journalistic programmes, the BBC is presumably aspiring to the same degree of seriousness and authority as a quality newspaper. Yet it is astonishing how seldom it achieves that level, producing instead work that is tendentious and cheaply sensational No doubt this may in part be ascribed to the lack of judgment or the bias of those who make the programme; it is also something inherent in the medium.

Television can make a case. Indeed yes; it is essentially an advocate's medium. The shocking image hits the eye more powerfully than its verbal equivalent. The picture of a bruised face or a pig confined in a machine stays in the memory and works on the imagination more keenly than words. Yet the case television makes so often depends on just this; it relies on evoking an emotional response rather than on a logical presentation of facts. It is advocacy in the old-style ham fashion of a Marshall Hail: "Gentlemen of the jury, can you resist the appeal of this abandoned wait?"

The waif, in this farming programme, was the taxpayer or the consumer, possibly even British industry. All suffered, we were told, from the indulgence granted the farmer. We saw surpluses being stacked in warehouses, trees crashing to the ground as land was cleared for grain, and of course, our three Strasbourg farmers tucking into their food and wine. "Agriculture", proclaimed Richard Lindley, the programme's author and presenter, in unctuous tones, "is taking the capital British industry desparately

In the absence of two-way TV one cannot ask Mr Lindley to explain how money from Common Agricultural Policy contributions (which in fact amount to a very small percentage of national income) might be diverted to industry. One cannot ask him either why he thinks banks are happy to lend to agriculture but not to other subsi-dized industries, and to challenge the conclusion that it is because farmers deliver the goods they are even Mr Lindley, delivers tablets from Mount Sinai. Not so: more and more, TV journalism belongs to the feature page (like this piece), and can claim no authority beyond that of the arguments advanced.

Here that was very little. How much respect can you accord to a programme which tells you (disapprovingly) that "the average farmer enjoys a larger income than an army captain or a university lecturer"? So what? That presumably means his income is smaller than a colonel's or professor's. What one would like to know is how it compares with a publican's or a bookie's, but here Mr indley is silent

The principal case against the CAP is that it encourages surpluses. (Better, one would have thought, than deficiencies, which it eliminates). "Butter", the reporter told us, is expensive, and so the consume rejects it". No doubt some do. though it goes fast enough in the supermarkets I frequent, and my own family gets through a few pounds of the stuff a week.

There is, of course, a case against the creation of surpluses and against the way the CAP works in detail, but it is not a case that can be convincingly argued with this sort of spatter-gun technique. It is not made more cogent by the assumption that there is an unlimited supply of cheap food outside the EEC or by the refusal to recognize that a principal purpose of the system of guaranteed prices is the elimination of shortages. And it is not helped by ignoring the element of subsidy to the consumer, the way in which the supplementing of farmers' incomes in this manner makes a choice of food more widely, and in fact cheaply, available than would be the case if we relied on a free market. But then this programme was not in the business of serious argument. It was an expression of prejudice and incitement to more. How else explain the intrusion of this year's anti-farming grouse, stubble-burn-ing? There's no subsidy for that, and it was not relevant to the theme farmers we cannot afford.

The BBC has long lost its reputation for objectivity; but in programmes like Pangrama it has not abandoned its claim to authority. Mr Lindley can obviously write what he pleases about farmers. however incompetently. But Panorama has been the BBC's current affairs flagship for so long that it is an unsuitable place for bias.

At some point the BBC - and the independent companies, for they are no better in this respect - should reconsider their classification of programmes and aim for a clearer distinction than exists at present between news and comment; between the objective and informaremains that television speaks ex tive programme and the piece of collective provision?

Anita Mason confesses surprise, not that she is the only woman author on the short list for this year's Booker Prize, but that she figures on the list at all.

"I was confident that this was a good book, and I knew that it was unusual, but I thought it so obscure in its subject matter that few other people would be interested", she Says.

The book in question is The Illusionist, her second novel, and its obscure subject matter is a fictional exploration of the life of Simon Magus, a bit part player in the New Testament who gave his name to the sin of simony, the buying or selling of a benefice. It appeared in May of this year, to mixed reviews.

On first sight it bears little relation to her first novel, Bethany, set in Cornwall, where she has lived, in a cottage in a village near Liskeard, for the past 14 years. But she herself sees it as a development of the same abstract idea "What Bethany is really about is how a person should behave if he is Washington during the recent utterly convinced he is right about something, and what steps he is entitled to take to make other people agree with him. The whole point of The Illusionist is what St Peter is obliged to do to resist Simon the heretic and ensure the preservation of the early Christian faith. To do that, he faces the dilemma of having to act completely against his own faith and beliefs, and I found that dilemma fascinating."

She read the story of Simon, more or less by accident, some years ago, and stored it at the back of her mind, wanting to do something with it but not sure what. Years later, a chance talk with her literary agent convinced her it should become a novel. It proved to be an enormous task that consumed two and a half years. "It was every bit as difficult as I had feared. It needed a vast amount of research into Roman politics, the Jewish religious background, the early Christian church, and firstcentury attitudes to magic". Simon is a charlatan and a trickster, whose party trick is being able to fly.

Historical evidence of his life is almost non-existent, but there is plenty of legend about his aerobatics, and his tricks of moving mountains and making statues talk. In the book, Peter becomes Kepha, the Aramaic version of his name, for reasons other than those of historical accuracy. "If I had filled the book with names like Peter, and Jesus, and so on, I would have stirred too many long-standing responses and associations in the reader. I had to try to distance it from the legend so that it is read with a fresher mind."

Anita Mason, born in Bristol 41 years ago, read English at Oxford. She enjoyed it, but thought it poor preparation for creative writing.

"It developed my critical faculties to such a degree that I felt everything I wrote was dreadful. I needed a different kind of stimulus." She found that stimulus several years later when she attended a course on playwriting for radio; she has yet to

For her second book, she decided to take herself off to Turkey for three months in the hope that the remoteness from all things familiar would concentrate her thinking. But she found it noisy, inconvenient and troublesome, and was soon back in her Cornish cottage. "There is something claustrophobic about Cornwall, but at least it's quiet."

She used to work in publishing in London, but eventually decided to step off the career ladder. When she first went to Cornwall, she took a job as a sub-editor on The Cornish Times, but left to take the plunge into full-time writing when Bethany was accepted. She still has to take odd jobs when the money runs out, and is currently employed on an archaeological excavation of medi-

Within a few weeks Edmund Akenhead will be able to have a go at The Times crossword for the first time for nearly 20 years. He has been deprived of this basic Englishman's right since 1965, when he became its editor.

Now he is retiring on his seventieth birthday, and once the stockpile of meticulously edited ouzzles handed over to his successor is finished he will at last be on equal terms - at least notionally - with his readers. There will be some happy exceptions: he will continue to set three puzzles a month himself and to mark the principal holidays of the year with his commodious Jumbo puzzles, which must call for skills of the quantity surveyor as well as those of the wordsmith.

From Torquemada onwards the crossword compiler has been commonly represented as a fiend or torturer. But a more benign or pacific person than Edmund one cannot imagine. He went to school at Rugby, where he was on the classical side. In 1936 he qualified as a solicitor and joined the family firm in Newport. During the war he was for a time an instructor in gliding at an RAF school, and after the war took a legal post in the Colonial Service in Dar-es-Salaam, Tanganyika, where

ANSWERING BACK

"We must deal with the Soviet Union not as we would like it to be, but as it is", said the Prime Minister in her Washington speech on Thursday. Quite so. But we must also deal with the Soviet Union not as it would like us to be, but as we are. Mrs Thatcher warned the West against projecting its own morality onto the Soviet leadership. That was the key element in her speech. She was touching on a mistaken assumption which has been one of the unfortunate products of the period of détente. Soviet reaction to her speech, and speeches like it, tends to derogate the use of strong language on the grounds of its bellicosity, while ignoring the recurring bellicosity of similar Soviet speeches. Much western commentary makes the same criticism. It reveals a curious double standard which accepts that it is unexceptional when Soviet rhetoric is challenging and aggressive but wrong when the West replies in kind. It is argued rather patronizingly, that Soviet leaders should be allowed their rhetoric because it stems from a basic feeling of insecurity, and that they should not be aggravated by any kind of counterpoint.

The Soviet Union, as it is, is a power and a system which has been engaged in a continuous and conscious policy of international expansion. Its tools of expansion go beyond the methods of "peaceful co-existence" once described by Mr

the Soviet Union's allies, neighbours and any other party unable to defend itself verbally or physically from such an assault. Its methods include overt and covert means, since the Soviet leadership has shown since the Russian revolution that what it cannot achieve openly, it will try to achieve by subversion, propaganda or just plain intimidation. It hopes to achieve the gains of war, without running the risks of war, by the simple device of calling it peace. The western alliance has achieved the physical security of its members against this assault for thirty-five years; but no verbal security to go with it. We are and have been in a war of words, as the Prime Minister said, for the hearts and minds of societies which are still free. In this war the Soviet leadership maintains its ideological intention to prosecute the struggle against the enemies of socialism. while the western societies - the intended victims of this conflict - are not supposed to answer

The period of détente came to be seen in the West as a suspension of hostilities while to Soviet eyes it was never anything of the kind. The Soviet leadership never made any secret of the fact that the conflict between the systems was to continue, but by other means. The West, however, decided that detente meant that the conflict was over. Western leaders gave up the struggle. They gave it up politidrawn from a period in which it remained acceptable for the Soviet leadership and all its communist affiliates in the West to continue the ideological attack on western society, but not acceptable for western society to answer back in kind, even by the simple assertion of the positive case for free and democratic societies?

The significance of Mrs Thatcher's speeches on the Soviet Union, and some of those more articulate statements by the Reagan administration, particularly by Mrs Jeanne Kirkpatrick, the US Ambassador to the UN, is that this imbalance is now being corrected. There is a new sense of self-confidence in the correction. The speeches are unapologetic and robust. They indicate a determination not to let the argument for freedom go by default. It has gone by default for so long because it has been unfashionable to suggest that we should base our policy on an assumption that our approach to the Soviet Union should be the same as the Soviet approach to

It has been said that the best way to counter physical intimidation is to speak softly and carry a big stick. But an ideological assault cannot be met with silence. We may know that tyrannies have no respect for the truth and are based on what Boris Pasternak described as "the inhuman reign of the lie". But the big lie, much repeated, tends to take root. Once it has Khrushchev. They include verbal and physical aggression on What other conclusion can be

IT IS ALL IN THE BREEDING

The future success of British racing depends on a continuous supply of top class thorough-breds from British studs. The British bloodstock industry is indeed the plinth of the column whose crown is the season's classic races and the other Group I events which attract leading borses from Europe and the United States to compete against British runners. This week's sales at Tattersalls in Newmarket have attracted attention for the high prices paid for top class yearlings. There is a danger, however, that the few extravaganzas will give a wholly distorted impression of the basic economics of British bloodstock.

In fact this year there are signs of underlying health in British bloodstock, and not just at the top end of the market. That has been matched by evidence that many of the best horses are now being bought to stay, race, then hopefully breed, in Britain. That is a welcome development after some years in which British breeders seemed unable to compete with the big money available from elsewhere: Nearly half of the highest paid yearlings sold at the Keeneland Select Summer Sales this year, for instance - often the progeny of horses which had previously been bought from Britain - will now return to race and breed in this country.

All that can only be to the advantage of the racing industry, but it does not happen by chance. Better racing, with higher class fields, will only continue to attract foreign money if the British bloodstock industry can provide the initial quality, which then attracts foreign investment in British racing. The benefits flow to agents, trainers, jockeys and stable staff.

However, as Lord Manton, Club, pointed out in his speech at the St Leger dinner, these welcome developments have more to overcome than mere chance. In racing, the compe-tition is fierce, global and continuous. The key to meeting it, and to survival for the racing industry, is an environment which encourages the bloodstock industry.

The decline in the number of new foals is not necessarily a serious development provided that the quality can be maintained from fewer studs. Nevertheless the direct competition from Ireland and France has the advantage of a more favourable VAT regime and, in the case of Ireland, a virtual tax holiday for breeders. In Britain, by contrast, stud farms not only suffer from VAT, but are also threatened with the imposition of rates for stud farm buildings, and a refusal by the Inland Revenue to recognise that stud farming is farming, comparable to producing, say, a pedigree herd of beef cattle or sheep. It should thus qualify for the same capital tax relief as other agricultural enter-prises, both with regard to land and animals. On what basis, does the tax man determine that a broodmare is different in kind from a prize pedigree cow? In taxation different from a champion bull? These distinctions smack of an official attitude which must spring from the idea that stud farming is a hobby for gentlemen. That could not be more wrong today. The Revenue must surely recognise that stud-farming is the essential basis for the future growth and profitability of the entire racing industry, which last year provided £272,000.000 in revenue for the Exchequer, of which less than £19,000,000 was returned through the betting levy. That kind of vitality can only be maintained by a more sensible approach to the taxation of stud farming than we have yet seen uninfluenced by the headline treatment given this week to the highest bidders at the sales.

THAT ONCE THROUGH TARA'S HALLS...

When the Garda Siochana finds Shergar, whom it has been looking for for nine months, there will be no problem about restoring him to his owners. There may be a problem for the insurers, who have been paying out, but not for the police, who know which his stable is. But when they find the Irish crown jewels, for which they have been looking for rather longer, matters will not be so simple.

The Gardai took on the search as part of the unfinished business of the Royal Irish Constabulary. There is a flurry in the file from time to time; as now, with metal detectors at work in the foothills of the Dublin mountains. It is not so long ago that another metal detector turned up a ninthcentury silver chalice at Derrynaflan, the best example of early Christian art to come to light in Ireland this century. So who knows?

The Republic of Ireland has no present use of its own for the Queen. It might be thought to follow that it would have no use for her jewels either, which could be restored to her in a simple ceremony with the compliments of President Hillery. But it is no for the United Kingdom, but the surprise to find that objects proposal did not find favour, described as "Irish crown jewels" are of ambiguous status. The facts concerning them do not in any simple way determine what ought to be done with William the Fourth in 1831 commanded that the Irish crown jewels be made into a resplendent badge, star and collar for the Grand Master of the Most Illustrious Order of Saint Patrick (a sort of green Garter). It was from the custody of that order in Dublin Castle that the insignia were stolen seventy-six years ago in circumstances that showed "a strange want of a sense of responsibility and in fact deliberate carelessness" in those concerned, according to the commission that inquired into the loss.

The jewels, supposing they turn up, cannot be returned to the Order of St. Patrick, for the order is defunct. Its last knights expired with the Duke of Windsor and the late Duke of Gloucester. Its revival was mooted for the purpose of honouring the Irish generals not the same thing. It is only as a who won the second great war least of all with the Irish government.

So, with the monarch having conveyed the jewels a century and a half ago to an order of chivalry that has now vanished, there may be no better claimant than the finder, a state that was torn out of anger and shame at the royal purposes the jewels once served. The Crown would be unlikely to object; though if it did, there are useful precedents for dealing with the disputed possession of Anglo-Irish property in the remains of Sir Roger Casement and the pictures of the Lane bequest.

The Irish authorities might be pleased to display the jewelry as relics of a dead past. Its reappearance in Dublin would stir none of the emotion that surrounded the return of the Holy Crown of Saint Stephen to Budapest five years ago. The Irish symbolism of this treasure is decidedly negative. Even triumph is out of place. When Malachi wore the collar of gold, he had won it from the proud invader. Finding lost property is valuable curiosity that the Irish crown jewels will reappear, if they do.

Future of Hongkong From Sir William Keswick

Sir, The most important thing to remember about Hongkong is that it is a safe place of commerce, built up over the last 100 years by British merchant adventurers and nimblewitted Chinese.

The continuation of this "place of commerce" is what both sides want. It suits both. Politicians and bureaucrats are Professor Basil Yamey not ideal negotiators in the delicate matters such as stable trade, rates of exchange and "tace".

Sailing boats on Church's involvement in politics wrong tack?

From Sir Eric St Johnston

Sir, The much-publicised contest for the America's Cup has at last concluded, but there are already suggestions that there will be a similar contest in four years' time. May I suggest that a better solution would be that after Australia has had its well-deserved moment of triumph the cup should be decently buried in Newport Sound and a firm decision taken that there should be no further international races for 12metre yachts?

It has been reported that Mr de Savary has spent £5m sterling to pay for the British attempt to be a formal contender and there is no doubt that other contenders have spent just as much if not more.

Now that the contest is over these spectacular racing machines have, to all intents and purposes, become expensive, useless toys. It would, I suggest, be much more worth while and do the youth of England much more good if the money had instead been spent on the building and endowing of two more sail training ships of the type of the Sir Winston Churchill and the Malcolm Miller, for this would have enabled several thousand young men and women to have the opportunity for years to come to savour the excitement of deep-water sailing and give them an oppor-tunity to develop their spirit of adventure and to stretch themselves both physically and mentally.

If each country which has built a 12-metre had also similarly built sail training ships there could have been a continual and valuable interchange of young people sailing in training ships owned by the different nationalities.

I do not in any way denigrate the ability, physical fitness and dedi-cation of the crews in the recent races, but they are a favoured few and we should be thinking of the many.

Yours faithfully, T. E. ST. JOHNSTON, Old Swan House, Great Rissington, Gloucestershire. September 29.

From Mr David Laurent Giles

Sir, Many years ago, as a schoolboy, I found in my father's private bookcase a book describing some of the experiments of William Froude with planks of various proportions of length and width, which have become the basis of what are today described, by certain "experts", as the "laws" of naval architecture.

My father, a leading yacht designer of his day, finding me reading this book, was extremely was "a designer of yachts, not of planks".

The work of men like Ben Lexcen, David Hollom and others continues to demonstrate that the forces which confine and restrict the passage of a hull through the water are almost as much of a mystery today as they have ever been; that innovation in the design of hulls is as much a matter of art as of science; and that the humble model experiments of the sailor-artists are as likely to lead to successful innovation in hull design as all the "laws" - or the arrogance - of the mathematicians and their computers. Widows' pensions From Mr Donald Reid

Sir. On September 17 you published an article by Ian McDonald entitled "What widows can claim in pensions" from our national insurance scheme.

A widow with no children under the age of 40, whose deceased husband had regularly paid contributions, gets no pension after the initial 26 weeks of widowhood. The widow has to be 50 years or over before she receives the full benefit of £32.85 per week.

The purpose of insurance schemes is to provide financial support for those most in need, the funds being made available from contributions paid by the more fortunate. It appears that our national insurance scheme fails to support those hardest hit by the tragedy of early bereavement.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

From Dom Raphael Appleby, OSB Sir, I suppose it is the natural refuge of a guilty conscience that when governments, or people with influ-ence, are engaged in promoting activities that are hard to reconcile with the message of the Gospel (such as the nuclear arms race, trading in weaponry, supporting an insti-tutional or national greed that ever increases the gap between the rich and the poor) they should attempt to silence or discredit any priest who challenges them.

So Roger Scruton (feature, September 27), who would seem to be part of a concerted attempt by this Government and its supporters to deny the right and duty of priests and bishops to speak out against injustice and oppression, by claiming that such matters, being "secular", are not their concern. Try telling that to the Old Testament

To this Roger Scruton adds a smear technique, suggesting first that the 93 elected priests at the National Conference of Roman Catholic Priests were doubtfully representative, since there are over 5,000 priests in England and Wales (I don't know where that leaves the House of Commons), and secondly that the assembly was "vociferous" and therefore unreliable.

A more unvociferous conference it would be hard to find (one very distinguished religious affairs correspondent described it to me as "dull").

of the vast majority of Catholics who do not like "the pestilence of pulpit politics" (article, September 27) and the efforts being made to transform our Church into a secular debating society.

Your contributor, Roger Scruton, in implying this effort as a main theme of the latest national conference of Roman Catholic priests, writes, "it cannot be said with any certainty that the assembly was representative. In so far as I am able to measure it, the impact in this parish is a tepid exercise by less than per cent. From sources other than this parish I learn that the method of financing this exercise is a "pea-in-the-shoe", or perhaps a "hair shirt" for many a good parish priest. It is therefore interesting to read your contributor's report that the clergy

PEN in Poland

From the President of The English Centre of International PEN. Sir, At a time when Mr Scargill has been defending Polish "socialism" your readers may be interested to learn the latest news of the Polish

Centre of International PEN. Until recently, although the offices of Polish PEN had been sealed and the organisation itself suspended, its officers were still able to communicate with other PEN centres and to distribute the money, food parcels and medicines sent by them for Polish writers in distress. On August 19, however, the authorities decided to "revive" the Polish centre. To this end they created a new board, headed by four non-writer bureaucrats, and announced that these Government nominees would run the Polish centre until a new board had been elected. This action has been taken regardless of the fact that the Polish centre, like every other centre of

PEN, is strictly non-governmental and that its board can be dissolved

Loyalties at the BBC

From Sir Robert Lusty Sir, I have not as yet read Michael Tracey's biography of Sir Hugh Greene, but I would like quickly to share Sir Hugh's doubts about certain aspects of the author's understanding of his conversations with the late Sir Charles Curran. "It may all seem distant and academic now...yet the question of where the key loyalties lay at moments of crisis are essential writes Alan Franks in his article. "The making of a Hugh-dunnit" (September 23). In this particular instance it is a matter of high importance. At that relevant time it was my privilege to be Lord Normanbrook's vice-chairman on the Board of Governors and in this capacity I had, of course, many private talks with him, many of them on the subject of Sir Hugh Greene, during whose period as Director General I had been a governor for most of the

Whilst I have no wish to trump a Cardinal with a Pope I have the impression that politicians are officially banned from the pulpits and the clergy from the hustings.

House of Lords, From Mr Mark Gore

Sir, Mr Roger Scruton's article of September 27, as with all statements of ideology masquerading as the truth. fails to mention the one concept it is trying to evoke: responsibility. I suggest that encouraging ritualistic behaviour can have the effect of deadening peoples' sense of national and civic responsibility ("neighbourhood organiza-tions, trade unions, local government and Parliament"), especially when it is suggested by the likes of Mr Scruton that these rituals (and "obedience") are the truest ex-pression of faith.

agree with Mr Scruton's assertion that one of the strengths of the traditional Roman Catholic Church was that "it offered a definite and authoritative system of answers to life's questions"; in fact one of the conceivable results of this 'strength" was the alliance between Mussolini's fascist administration and the very same Roman Catholic Church. Perhaps Mr Scruton should go and ask certain Roman Catholic priests in Central and South America about their faith and conception of responsibility in the world, rather than using his column to give free publicity to his friends from Peterhouse. Yours sincerely, between Sir Hugh and the Chairman, Sir Arthur fforde, whose retirement through illness might well have proved calamitous had his successor been other than Lord Normanbrook. Fortunately, with him Sir Hugh found himself, if not as personally close, equally in sympathy and understanding.

Lord Normanbrook certainly became aware that the Director General needed careful handling. He was not an easy man nor always a tactful one and sometimes made pronouncements on BBC matters which would better have come from the Chairman. But of his brilliance and of his leadership there were no doubts and I do not think that at any time was the thought in Lord Normanbrook's mind that the moment had come for a change.

I recall discussing at one talk what might happen should Hugh be run over by the proverbial bus. "How about Curran?," I asked. Normanbrook was aghast. "Curran", he exclaimed, "Curran is a Roman Catholic and the BBC could never have such as its DG." Nor do I think that Lord Normanbrook, the epitome of punctilio, would have discussed so sensitive a point with even so senior a member of the BBC as its Secretary.

The importance and irony of this point within the context of history is to remember that within a short time Lord Normanbrook had died, Lord Hill had been translated from the chair of the opposing ITA to that of the BBC, Sir Hugh Greene had ceased to be its Director General and changes were made to ensure, in the minds of many, that neither the BBC nor any subsequent Director General would again experience the climate that had served it so well in fulfilling its great purposes of public service broadcasting. An abiding sense

From the Secretary General of the Heritage Trust

Sir, I would like to refer to Sir Roy Strong's article in The Times of September 24. "Taking the age out of heritage", and wish to point out that in its normal interpretation, at least, the word "heritage" is used to describe something of a certain intrinsic value, which is worthy of being passed on to subsequent generations as a true expression of a people's highest traditions and aspirations. It cannot be applied, in my opinion, to just anything and certainly not to whatever has been produced in our own time, without inspiration or any attempt to comply with the basic ethical and aesthetical standards of our society that are an integral part of our cultural identity.

In view of the ravages inflicted to the architectural beritage of most Western countries in the 1960s, to which one can add the grave uncertainties of the present times. I cannot help feeling that people's resulting and by now instinctive addiction to the preservation of the past is a very salutary symptom indeed! It also proves that the average person, thank goodness, has a natural preference for quality and is far more discriminating in his choice than is generally recognised.

This does not mean that one should not appreciate what is of value and belongs to our own age. However, whether in the long run it will be accepted as part of our natural heritage is a decision which, in most cases, must be left to the objectivity of posterity. The test, as in history, will be one of time. Far more important is the acceptance, nowadays, that one's feelings about conservation should really be extended beyond regional and even national borders to include whatever is of real value to the basic quality of life of the human race as a

The problem, as I see it, is not the addiction to heritage, as described by Roy Strong, but simply that if too localised in character it tends to lose all sense of historic vision.

Yours faithfully, JOHN M. CALABRINI, Secretary General, The Heritage Trust, 86 Vincent Square, SW1, September 26.

Rates reform

From Sir Thomas Padmore Sir, The Chief Executive of Swale Borough Council says in his letter which you publish today (September 28): "Local income tax would be an entirely viable alternative to rates, needing only a computer and a programme for its introduction".

Mr White's faith in his compu is remarkable. Is his machine really capable of solving the problems involved in this tax, which many (including, I suspect, HM Government) regard as wholly insurmountable - viz., the designation and definition of the incomes and the persons (individual or corporate) to be liable to the tax and of the local authority who in any particular case will be entitled to levy it; and, when those things have been decided, the creation of the machinery whereby the incomes to be assessed will be ascertained and the tax levied and collected?

Yours faithfully, T. PADMORE. 39 Cholmeley Crescent. Highgate, No. September 28.

Relatively speaking

From Dr H. M. Smallwood Sir. How did Dr McGlashan, whose article you published on September 24, get the notion that modern science is abandoning objectivity? Was it possibly from reading references to the observer in accounts of relativity theory? But the observer of relativity has no 'psyche"; in fact, he may as well be an instrument.

I may add that relativity insists that neither tears nor prayers can alter the speed of light in a vacuum or stop momentum from being conserved.

Dr McGlashan thinks that there is evidence of harm resulting to patients from the "strictly objective and impersonal attitude" exemplified in the double-blind test. But his belief that no two patients are comparable prohibits him from producing any evidence at all. He may cite single cases; he cannot add them up.

Science report New twist in the quasar enigma By Pearce Wright, Science Editor

Two new propositions are published this week offering different explanations about the behaviour of quasars but bringing these strange objects within the frame-

Initially these faint point-like sources of light were mistaken for stars in our own galaxy. Measurements of their spectrum of light radiation then gave results which could be consistent only with an object thousands of millions of light object mousants or minious or light years away at the farthest part of the miverse and moving rapidly away. In addition, the light source belonged to an object emitting more energy than a hundred supergiant galaxies.

While the star-like appearance is a key feature, the conflict on their whereabouts in the universe and the type of violent activity which seems to occur in a relatively compact object has focused on the phenomenon of red-shift exhibited by quasars.

It is a property which can explain the difference between a normal spectrum of light and that of an object reeving away from an observer at a colossal speed. An analysis of the spectrum shows that the colours are pushed toward the red end. With an object coming rapidly towards an ob-server the colours would be pushed toward the blue end. That is the doppler effect explanation for the distortion.

Another possible cause of redshift is the influence on photons of light by gravitational forces when the photons are leaving the surface of a massive body. A third cause is called the cosmological red-shift which applies to bodies outside our galaxy and whose red-shift increases with distance.

Some of the characteristics needed for this explanation of red-shift are also included in a proposal in Nature by G. A. Shields, of the department of astronomy at the University of Texas at Austin, of quasars rotating supermassive aters.

The influence of the rapid rotation of light emitted from the gaseous surface of such a large body accounts for the red-shift.

In both these explanations, there is no need for the quasars to be objects at the furthermost distances of the universe behaving the arrow which define the convent. in a way which delies the current understanding of the universal laws of physics.

How often do we hear nowadays a full blooded sermon on eternal punishment? Practically never, wherever we may go to church. Yet, until quite recently the fearsome doctrine of everlasting damnation for those who failed the test at the Day of Judgment echoed around the pulpits of Christendom. It provided the motive of urgency for Christian missions: it justified cruel per-secution, and it was regarded as a necessary deterrent for keeping frail humanity on the straight and arrow path.

As recently as the 1850s F. D. Maurice was deprived of his theological chair in London University for questioning the doctrine as it was preached in his time. In 1862 two of the contributors to Essays and Reviews who held benefices, few to weep at its funeral. So, when padres of the First World War assured the bereaved that the fallen in battle would pass straight into the heavenly places, no theologian dared to question this comforting doctrine, which, in fact, had no authority in scripture or in the tradition of the Church.

The churches never seem to have reckoned seriously with the vacuum caused by the falling into abeyance of the doctrine of Hell. Nor have they tried to put anything positive in its place. Hardly anyone would wish to see it trevived. But the question still remains unanswered. Can wayward humanity in its fallen state do without deterrents of one kind or another either in the terrestrial or celestial spheres?

Follies are an expensive kind of architectural joke. But they are not simply a frivolous diversion for "decadent people who have got money"; and they are enjoying a revival. Clive Aslet has been finding out how, where and why expect you are bored with being asked about your folly", I follies over yet. said to Robert Heber-Percy of Faringdon House. "I am rather", he replied. The folly in The 1980s in architecture is a question is a gaunt tower of brick surmounted by a corona of pinnacles. It was built as a iwenty-first birthday present from Lord Berners, author, rainter, musician and eccentric, in 1935. "How marvellous". I ventured. "Not really", he returned. "I would have pre-

The structure stands on what Oxfordshire. It was intended as an ornament to the landscape. although now that the trees have grown up only a spike or two is visible from a distance above the Scotch firs. The doorway has been concreted up because of vandals. Stories about it are legion.

The style was a compromise between Lord Berners's preference for Gothic and that of the architect, who was his friend Gerald Wellesley, future seventh Duke of Wellington, for classicism. Even in the more relaxed world of 50 years ago. there was enough opposition for an inquiry to be staged by the Ministry of Health. A local admiral objected. But, Wellesley retorted, he could not see it from his house without a telescope. "It is my custom to look through a telescope at the view", responded the admiral. That perhaps was the whole point of the building. "It was a tease", says Mr Heber-Percy. think the only reason Gerald (Lord Berners) built it was that he was told not to". Which is probably as good a reason for building a folly as most.

The essence of a folly is, naturally, that it has no purpose, or no purpose com-mensurate with the trouble and expense of erecting it. Although there were some Elizabethan follies, such as Sir Thomas Tresham's triangular lodge at Rushion, the golden age of course came in the eighteenth century when temples, Gothic lodges and rustic seats were dotted over the parklands of England like the classical ruins in a Claud Lorrain painting. However, to the late Sir Nikolaus Pevsner, the folly impulse died with Lord Berners's tower. "It must be the last of the follies", he wrote in The Buildings of England (Berkshire volume, since it was done on old counties). Anyone familiar with his hopes for rationalism in modern architecture can almost hear the sigh of relief.

ut to say anything is the last of anything is dangerous. There had been other twentiethcentury follies before the Faringdon tower: McCraig's Folly, a pink granite coliseum above the ferry port of Oban; the House in the Clouds, a clapboarded watertower turned into a six-storey house at Thorpeness; even the tower Messrs Oxo built over their warehouse in south London (the building itself is, somehow appropriately, used for making the "long eggs" in pork pies, by which each slice is given a cross section of yolk).

During the Second World War, the theatrical designer, Oliver Messel, was put into a camouflage unit and went to great lengths to disguise Somerset pillboxes as rustic incidents. such as Gothic lodges, caravans, haystacks, ruins and wayside cases. Nor is the building of good time for jokes. Some would say that architecture itself has become a bit of a joke, with both the moral and constructional premises of Modernism under attack. The architects of post-Modernism delight in making witty cultural references, such as the fringe of eggcups, symbol of breakfast, above the cornice of Terry Farrel Partnership's TV-am headquarters in Camden, north London. This firm's latest roject is to tidy up the forecourt of East Putney station. They intend a classical scheme with pavilions and cypress trees in the office, it is known as the Piazza di Putney.

To speak to an architect who 20 years, I visited Peter Foster, surveyor to Westminster Abbey and formerly partner of the late Grey, Huntingdonshire. His own garden boasts two examples. There is a Pompeian shell grotto at the end of a border and a temple aligned on the dining room window. The temple replaced a tree that died. "It would have taken too long for another tree to grow up, so I put this in its place." The fluted columns are not of an eighteenth-century material, being jolly good secret place for bird distance, which was often done by using brick covered with succo, rather than stone. Today fibreglass "can be very useful", Mr Foster says; it is probably this more than any-thing that has given folly building its new lease of life.

We drove a few miles to Abbots Ripton, where Lord De-Ramsey's breathtakingly romantic garden created out of an unpromisingly flat site contains Mr Foster's greatest concen-tration of follies. We stopped the car by a willow-fringed lake. On the other side was a little Chinese pavilion, with a copper roof beginning to turn green, as the architect intended, and a has not only designed but also gilded weather-vane of a stur-built many follies over the past geon spinning and flashing in geon spinning and flashing in the blustery wind. It was built about seven years ago, the design having been suggested by Marshall Sisson, in Hemingford a Constable sketch Mr Foster had seen in Country Life. "I used iroko wood from East Africa", he explained. "because it goes a lovely white colour and you don't have to maintain it. It lasts more or less indefinitely." Low maintenance bills are a consideration even for follies these days.

"What does one do in here?" I asked, when we got into the little 'room inside. "Nothing watching, so I put in this little, diamond-shaped shutter." A flock of duck took off from the lake as we trudged back. The lake itself is not such a folly as it might seem: it also serves as an irrigation reservoir for the farm and grants were available when during the hot garden, we walked along paths of beautifully green and springs lawn. We crossed a Chinese bridge made of timber. "It is based on a design by Abraham Swan, but I took a lot of trouble over its construction. Swan did a lot of these bridges." On the other side was a circular, thatched building with large, pointed windows. It was surtree trunks, still with their bark on, from which branches rose up to the eaves. On close inspection, it became clear that the branches were nailed on.

"I never quite got what wanted with the tree trunks' said Mr Foster. "I was after : much more natural effect with the branches. I went through all the woods with the keener, but I couldn't find the right trees Pine would have been more satisfactory; these ones are ash.

he folly that Mr Foster says is a Gothic screen and ogeo

canopy in trellis-work. It stands in the centre of a long flowering border, again on the site of a dead tree. "I think there are 400 crockets on it, something like that. It really wasn't possible to carve them all, so we had most of them cast in fibreglass in the kind of colour I thought the wood would go." The inspi-ration for this one? "Well, when one does have to look after Westminster Abbey .. " he said Back to the house. A tropical blast of warm, heavy air hit us as we entered the Pompeian swimming pool. The pool is surrounded by a peristyle of columns derived from Paestum. Beyond it is the Islamic folly, in the form of an Arabic gateway. It occupies one wall of a previously poky courtyard, which was certainly in need of something to enliven the view from the house. Here, too, what appear to be fearsome pointed studs on the gate are made out of fibreglass. For the next project, Mr Foster is consider-

Follies are of their nature amusing. They speak of a gentlemanly culture in which both wit and erudition are savoured. In the mid 1970s, Harry Graham of Bath built several, including a Chinese kiosk, for a client in Ross-on-Wye. "He was a wealthy man", says Mr Graham. "He had an extremely nice house and a large garden that was his main pleasure in life. He loved improving the garden and had nothing else to do. He was the mage of a cultivated gentleman

Licorne-style tent; no folly has been built quite in that form fussing over things he liked."

But that is not to say follies are merely frivolous. Ouinlan Terry, a hard-line champion of classicism who, it has to be said, is pretty serious about most things, has built several. "There is something very serious about follies. It is like the chap playing the violin and being amusing. but all the time sweating his guts out. Follies are very, very serious buildings. The architec-tural content is 100 per cent. They are nothing but architecture. I want to stop the idea about them being done by decadent people who have got money. Follies need to be very expensive and very well-built."

He is the only architect of the 19 at the Castelli show whose designs have been constructed. About 10 years ago. Mr Terry built a number of follies for Alistair and David McAlpine in Hampshire and Kent. They included a stone seat and temple, a geometrical bridge, a russic lodge, a large and elaborate birdcage for parrois and a Nymphaeum. The last is in the form of a pedimented screen with shell niches containing shepherds and shepherdess es on either side. Its front is carved in a dazzling trick perspective, so that it appears curved while being flat.

More recently, he has completed an elliptical Temple of

Off-the-peg follies

If individuality is a desideratum, the idea of an "off-the-peg" folly may seem a contradiction in terms. Nevertheless, a number of firms do supply follies from stock. They ly come in the form of temples with between four and six columns but other varieties are available.

Chilstone, of Horsmonden. Kent, the firm that recently supplied 130 urns for the restored Temperate House at Kew Gardens, have three models in their catalogue: a four-column Doric temple at £1,445; a five-column Doric temple at £1,680; and a six-column Roman lonic temple at £3,845. The columns are of reconstituted stone and the roofs of either wrought-iron or fibreglass. They could also make other follies, such as a castle (089 272 3553) as a castle facade, to order.

 Garden Crafts, 158 New King's Road, London, SW6 (01-736 1615). with painted, cast-concrete columns and a wrought-iron roof, at £1,964, and a smaller temple, a of wrought-iron, at £750.

● Crowther, of Syon Lodge London Road, Isleworth, wes London, supply modern cast-stone Doric temples, imported from Italy, at £4,750 each. They also offer genuine eighteenth-century park buildings. Understandably and, conservationists might say, thankfully, these are not easy to conservation. come by. The firm has none on show at present, although an Italia one (height 13ft 7ln, diameter 8ft 6in) was recently sold for £21,000. "We also have a wrought-iron Victorian folly, which we use as an aviary", says Linda Harrold. "The price is £16,000, but I do not know if it came to the crunch we would ever sell it. It looks so nice in our confused with the aviary at Syon Machin Conservatories, 4 Avenue Studios, Sydney Close, London SW3 (01-589 7551), make two timber pavillons, one of them Chinolserie, at prices something over £2,000.

The reasons for the variations at any given resort relate not only to current weather conditions but also to developments throughout the earlier part of the season. In fact the build-up before the crowds arrive may be one of the most important factors.

At any busy resort it is essential that a good base is built up on the popular pistes in November and December if the runs are to withstand the rigours of the high season. Thereafter, regular falls are needed to replenish the slopes.

creep; I mean, he really was a creep. It had to be said sometime and I've been biting my tongue ever since the 1493 affair. Ambition is one thing, uncontrollable appetites another, and colonizing greed, in the guise of patriotism, is positively obscene. A moderate person would have sent messges back to the king and queen in Seville, Cordoba or wherever. jauntily explaining that he'd discovered the United States of America, which was great - that he'd gone on to discover Miami, which was great, a great place for Spaniards, and could he please come home because the crew was fed up and scurvy was getting on top of them.

I may be doing Mr Columbus an injustice: los Reys Catolicos have much to answer for, not least the exploitation of the New World. It may be that a courtly edict admonished Columbus for sloth, urging him to sail on to discover more virgin territory to the glory of Spain.
Which is precisely what he did, stumbling across St Croix on November 14, renaming it Isla de la Santa Cruz presumably because he felt the aboriginal name of "Ay Ay" lacked class. Three days later he discovered other virgin islands, calling them Las Once Mil Virgines in honour of St Ursula and the legendary 11,000 martyr virgins. Virgin Gorda found him perhaps in a dyspeptic mood Fat Virgin.

Anti-social by nature, I think I would have enjoyed the Virgin Islands between 1685 and 1690. Tortola had been British since 1672 and I would have shared the lushly mountainous, 21-square-mile island with Jonathan Turner and his wife, breeding livestock, planting cotton and fishing. By 1690 there was a population explosion; with 14 men, several women and slaves, the place was going downhill. Which, oddly and truthfully, is the fact of the matter. The paucity of inhabitants, the lack of official awareness in the islands, determined a future which had scant administrative guidance from President Hoover once described the nearby American Virgin Islands as an "effective poorhouse", and those islands have been economically, socially and politically more advanced than their British neighbours where the landscape is rocky, soil thin, climate subarid; where rainfall is only moderate and evaporation high. I seem to have forgotten something. Oh yes, I remember now: they are quite luminously climax there is a contented gurgle from the pan and you realise you've won through.

That evening we sat beneath the stars, drinking "pain-killers", a concoction of rum and this and that; we dined, exquisitely, on pumpkin soup, salad, grilled lobster and lime

Later we were joined by a couple off a yacht, who came ashore for a drink. They had given up a real-estate business in the air-conditioned misery of New York, they told me, and drifted on tide and whim. "Don't you care", I asked, "what goes on in the outside world? They exchanged glances, the look of a team, two against that world. "Unless it's changed dramatically", he replied, "they're still out there, stabbing and backing each other into little pieces". After a day or two Mary Randall sent her launch and an hour later she stood on the jetty at Guana Island to welcome me to another kind of paradise, 850 acres of it. Her Land Rover skirted one of six beaches, then climbed past donkeys, short-haired sheep, mangoes, bananas, pineapple, papaya, climbing always to a pinnacle and Daphne's Sandcastle are two of a kind, as impenetrable, in their way, as the Jockey Club. Both possess an almost Masonic enclosing the favoured few in the purdah of exclusivity. You either belong or you do not; you can neither insinuate your way in, nor gatecrash. The atmosphere is more house-party than totel, guests speaking not nerely the same tongue but sharing the same emotional dialect - which is totally alien to the uninitiated. It has something to do with money, but not everything. By no means everything. That, together with such indelicate questions as background, are taken for granted. Your dia-monds will also be taken for granted, so there is no need to wear them. There is no entertainment, no dancing, no "folkloric" floorshow. Guana has a library, Sandcastle has Vivaldi on tape. There may be bridge, there is certainly dinner party conversation; there is walking, swimming, sitting in a heap marvelling at the other-worldliness of it all, watching pelicans skim low over the sea. In sublime, transistoriess peace. Mary's boat ran me over to Mosquito Island, also privately owned, where Drake's Anchorage is situated. There has been an inordinate rainfall which had brought out the mompums and no-secums, smali aeronautical creatures designed by our Heavenly Father to make us think better of mosquitoes. There were also several un-

There is a majestic and chef Martin Belmar's chocolate mousse is the talk of the Spanish Main from Puerto Rico to Panama. But again, the deprivations are immense no motor cars, no telly, no disco. And, if you'll excuse the blasphemy, no golf.

There's worse to come. From Mosquito (so named, incidentally, after an Indian tribe, not the national bird) you can almost, but not quite, see Saba Rock, home of the Kilbrides: that's Bert, the father, Jim, the son: Jacob, the holy terror of a grandson; and Francine, daughof them - blessed, wonderful loonies. I'd better explain: for ages Bert, who is 69, has been diving off the Anegada Reef for sunken treasure. He knows it's there, the Smithsonian Institution did a conclusive survey and even if they hadn't, Bert just knows.

There are 147 ships down there, including several from the Spanish fleet. There are 17 wrecks per square mile. So there's gold all right, it's just that they haven't found any, despite investing $1 million and 25 years in the project. They've found cannons and bottles, a sword hilt, skulls, a miscellany of bones and the odd Coca Cola can. But no gold.

When they do, they're going to build the world's first underwater hotel. They showed me the plans, and when it's open I shall be one of the first to stay because it will be a damn good place to get away from the mompums and no-secums.

Loonies, I told you; and if there were more of their ilk the universe would be a wondrous place. Meanwhile, they'll go on diving, bringing up young Jacob in innocence, teaching guests at Bitter End how to scuba dive; for Saba, their home and a lump of island rock, is just off the Bitter End Yacht Club at North Sound, Virgin Gorda. Sailing accounts for 60 per cent of the tourist traffic to the BVI, mostly "bare-boat", charter sailing.

Which still leaves Virgin Gorda, Great Camence, Eustatia, Ginger Island, plus another 16 uninhabited islands. It also leaves Deadman's Chest, Fallen Jerusalem, Cockroach, Little Tobago and another 16 uninhabited. The drive from Gun Creek to Spanish Town in Virgin Gorda alone is worth the trip from Needham Market; while a similar drive around Tortola is a mystery tour because ther are no signposts. Someone sensibly decided that fewer destinations there was no point in squandering taxpayers' money. Not that there's much tax either.

If I had to define the quality of sophistication. I'd say it was something like Sophocles mixing a dry Martini. People who enjoy the BVI aren't like that; which doesn't mean to say they're dumb. I would guess they've got their act pretty well together, in an unobvious way. You don't just happen upon places like Guana and Sandcastle; usually they are the result years of discriminating search. And when you do find them, you don't go blabbing about it as I'm doing, Life, on the whole, is more of a compromise; which is where Peter Island Hotel and Yacht Harbour has been so thoughtful. Peter Island, managed by an Englishman, David Benson, and his Californian wife Gae, is self bliss, with built-in airconditioning, hot baths, refrigeration and wall-to-wall room service should you need to call upon it.

There are about four billion people cluttering up the global surface who tell you juicily at cocktail parties that they adore roughing it - provided there's a sauna and beauty parlour at the end of an exhausting day in the sun. This is where Peter Island comes in, the rough with the smooth, the place for all reasons, the ultimate compromise. Believe me, I don't admire myself for saying so but, after a month at Sandcastle, the devil could tempt me with a spot of plumbing. I am not averse to a conventional flush.

suddenly seizes the imagination of the wine world and becomes the latest craze, in much the same way as the hula-hoop and the skateboard did among schoolchildren. Château Musar. that unusual Lebanese wine that tasted like a Bordeaux, was the sensation of the Bristol Wine Fair a few years back, and Moulin Touchais, that curious old white wine from Anjou, was all the rage a year or so ago. Rioja and California wines have both enjoyed a turn in the spotlight, and there are signs that the wines from the cooler Pacific north-west (Oregon, Idaho and Washington States) may well become the next fashionable tipple.

But in the meantime the latest star, so new that it arrived in this country only last month, could prove to be a humble Vin de Pays de l'Hérault – the Mas de Daumas Gassac. This sou-thern vin de table was hailed in November by that French bible of gastronomy Gault-Millau – a publication not exactly known for its fulsome praise – as the "Château Lafite Languedo-cien". And it did not stop there: 'A unique wine, no doubt soon to be recognized as the equal of great classified Bordeaux". Not to be outdone, the Revue Vinicole then described Mas de Daumas Gassac as "a miracle", and the rest of the French wine press followed suit.

After this accolade. I was keen to taste the wine. But I had my doubts: no wine from the Languedoc could surely be that

The answer is that it isn't. The young, chunky red wines from this youthful 12 hectare estate (the first vines were planted in 1973) are made predominantly from the Cabernet Sauvignon grape, rounded off with a little Malbec, Merlot and Cabernet Franc among other varieties. They are actually more like Latour than Lafite. With their enormous colour and immense, hefty tannic character, they are certainly impressive, but they need time to soften up.

The 1980 is the one Mas de Daumas Gassac red that you could just about open now, if you wanted to see what all the fuss was about. With its deep full, fruity taste, it is definitely the best of the reds and a good hefty wine to go with the first winter dishes. (£4.85 from Bow Wine Vaults, 10 Bow Church-yard, London EC4; £4.80 from Bibendum, 113 Regent's Park Road, London NW1.)

Much the most attractive of the Mas de Daumas wines at the moment is the 1982 Rosé Frisant, which is made half and half from the Cabernet Sauvig-non and the Syrah grapes. Its depth of fruit and punchy fullbodied flavour make it one of the best pink wines I have ever tasted, and it should cheer up any autumnal day with its bright, pinky-red colour and lively sparkle. (Bow Wine Vaults and The Wine Studio, 9 Eccleston Street, London SW1).

If drinking rose in October strikes you as silly, then I suggest you try a lovely warming winter wine, the Les Arnevels 1981 Châteauneuf-du-Pape from J.R. Quiot (£3.99 at selected branches of Tesco's). Make certain you open it at least half an hour in advance.

The arrival of autumn does not mean that one has to give up white wines altogether. I find some of the most comforting wines in cold weather are whites with a slight touch of sweetness, particularly as aperitifs. The old sweet Loire wines, for instance, are ideal; recently I retasted a delicious golden 1973 Chaume from J.P. Tijou in the Coteaux du Layon whose luscious, smoky, minerally flavour was every bit as good second-time round. This is another bargain buy at £3.72 from High Breck Vintners, Spats Lane, Headley.

COLLECTING

Spoonfuls of whimsy to go with the tea

It is a curious fact that the much very top end of the collected tea caddy has no reserved for the society of its own, while its rarer accompaniment, the tea-caddy spoon, has enjoyed the atten-tions of the Society of Caddy Spoon Collectors for the last 21 years. A case not so much of the cart before the horse but of the self-propelling cart, for these fanciful spoons with their stunted stems have an instant collectibility.

The caddy spoon emerged towards the middle of the eighteenth century and in its earliest form differed very little from a medicine spoon: a narrow oval bowl with a short stem which lived in a drawer at the base of the caddy. The most prolific maker of this kind of spoon was George Smith, who was working during the third quarter of the eighteenth century. It was not until the 1780s that the wide-bowled, squatstemmed spoons were specially made for the job, being small enough to fit inside the Politicians are expected to have a finger in every pudding, but not many do it literally. Leonard Grimwade was an exception, daibling in many enterprises which included exploring, local politiking and the selling of pudding steamers all round the world. That was in the early 1900s. Today Mr Grimwade's pudding steamer is being made by Royal Winton who took over the Grimwade factory and it is part of a range of designs under the Edwardian Kitchen Company brand. They have been resurrected by the company's founder Mandy Wilkins, who has collected original Edwardian kitchenware for many years. The lipped bowls were based on a delry bowl which had an inner rim to keep the files out but in the modern version the rim has been eliminated. "What is the point, these days?". Mandy Wilkins says. On the rocks

The best time to construct, redesign or replenish the rock garden is middle to late autumn, especially in wetter areas of the country. Success is easier to achieve if the plants, once planted, do not demand constant watering. Plants today are nearly all sold in pots which in many cases enables planting to take place at any time of the year. Late autumn, however, is still the best time. Plants classed as rock carden plants are usually to be found in areas where the rainfall is quite high, but where the drainage is very good. They are also to be found at higher eltitudes where the light is better. The siting, therefore, should be in open soil, where the plants are not iffected by too much shade. Plants will tolerate winds which are natural, but they dislike draughts intensely (winds which are diverted between buildings become draughts and these can be fatal to many plants). A windbreak may be needed.

Drainage should be good enough to take surplus water away. On light, sandy soils they may become invasive and this should be watched carefully. This anemone is sometimes difficult to establish and does not always accept what may appear to be good conditions. Move it to a different area and try again; it will repay the trouble. Over the years my family's nights ago, on a visit to a ideas of what constitutes an favourite Chinese restaurant. At enjoyable outing have changed the next table sat an American radically. But one that has remained constant is eating out at a restaurant and if we had more money, would do it at least once a week. I like eating en famille, believing that a family that eats together has a distinctly better chance of staying together than one that doesn't. The first was when I suggested to some visiting friends that we should all go out to dinner to an Italian restaurant.
"Take the children?" said the wife incredulously. "You must be joking - we'll get a baby sitter and burgers for them and then we'll go. Most restaurants don't like children at dinner anyway.'

ning to shed at least a quarter of their permanent staff in an effort to survive the financial crisis caused by the sudden loss of their lucrative role as investment managers to the Sultan of Brunei.

Civil Service unions have been told that between 300 and 400 of the 1,200 permanent jobs must go if the semi-independent Government agency is to have any chance of getting back onto a sound financial basis. Many of the 100 or so staff who worked in the agent's investment management div-ision have already been sent home on full pay for lack of anything to do. But the job losses will not be confined to this division and will be spread right across the agent's diverse areas of activity.

City Editor's Comment

Why buyouts are a seller's market

Most people will wish well retailing in the high street to the combined management buyonts of the Richard Shops and John Collier chains.

It is a healthy development for managers and workers to become risktakers in their own enterprises and a clear improvement on the agglomeration of ever larger units of economic power. It is also often a neat and uncontroversial way for big companies to dispose of unwanted businesses.

But there is a danger that enthusiam for the primciple will soften our view of the harsh realities of business life and that institutions. keen to support a fashionable idea, will be too easy with their money and bid up the hitherto modest prices for buyouts.

Yesterday's £104m deal. the biggest yet in the private sector, dwarfs even the buyout of the National Freight Corporation.
It would be a pity if either of the two components came a cropper. One highly publicized failure could have as poison an effect on the image of management buyouts as the Benn co-ops had on that of the industrial co-operative.

Just because the dead hand of one management is removed it does not necessarily follow that the new bosses can work a transformation. in today's climate of gung-ho support by the Government for selfmade businessmen it is easy to forget that owning a business also means that it must make money. No criticism of either the Collier or Richard management is implied.

They are enthusiastic and itching to show what they can do when they are let off the leash. And good luck to them - with a stake in the business they have every incentive to make it work. It is understandable that some institutions had cold feet at the last moment. It is all to easy to see as an instant formula for success: all the arguments for these two chains are right - people need to buy clothes, it is a fashion business aimed at customers with high disposable incomes and host of other bull points.

But the success of re-tailers like Marks & Spencer, Burton Group and J Hepworth's Next chain can blind people to the disaster areas in every high street. Look at Richard Shops' and John Collier's old parent, UDS. And look at the losses that the two chains contributed UDS's results. No doubt things will be different now that the management are running the show.

Look at FW Woolworth,

the high street's biggest stretcher case. Under the new management led by Mr John Beckett it will be turned round. But it will take five years - maybe seven - before the institutions which clubbed together to grab it see it really motoring. The Woolworth experience convinced a number of institutions that retailing is a long-term business. Failure tends to show up faster than success. In the mean time these two chains will be in head-on competition with established chains like Burton. Burton's recovery with its menswear and womenswear chains is what troubled John Collier and Richard Shops under UDS. Success now requires flair, not just aping Burton

There is always a niggling doubt when you buy something at auction hecause you pay more than anyone else would put in. That need not frighten off the City. But it should remember that management buyouts have special advantages to the seller that can justify a discount on the crude market price. And that, so far, has been powerful secret of their success.

Prohitic Unit Trusts is the trading name of Procurate Life

Most of us invest in Healthcare-as potential patients. We pay NHS contributions. More and more take out medical insurance, and pay attention to diet and fitness. Along with food, clothing and shelter, Healthcare is an essential element for survival in human life.

From a less personal point of view, Healthcare is also increasingly an essential element in the world economy. In Britain we spend over 5% of our entire National Product on Healthcare. In Japan the figure is 5.8% and in the United States it is more than 10%. These figures greatly exceed what we spend on education and vie with defence for top

Not only is expenditure on Healthcare very large; it is growing. We are now advancing the frontiers of medical knowledge daily; and as we do so, we bring new treatment, prevention and relief where it never existed before. All this costs increasingly large sums of money- money which people all over the world are prepared to find and spend, whether through taxes, insurance or privately.

Moreover, the steady increase in Healthcare expenditure is not affected by economic cycles; people's Healthcare needs do not change during a recession.

The Healthcare sector has been described as the 'classic recession-proof investment Nowhere does the opportunity for intelligent investment appear more strongly based.

All the more surprising, then, that Henderson Global Healthcare Unit Trust is the first UK authorised unit trust to invest exclusively in Healthcare. It thus offers a unique opportunity.

There are four main sectors within the industry: .Facilities

Spending on Healthcare facilities is rising in North America, the Far East, the Middle East and in Europe, be it on hospitals, nursing homes for the elderly, clinics for the psychiatrically disturbed, specialist units for the treatment of drug and alcohol abuse, convalescent homes or gymnasia Investor-owned medical facilities are a major factor in this expansion, and some of these offer investment opportunities of the highest quality.

The demand worldwide is for a modern and caring service, and for cost efficiency. Whether funds are provided by the State or by public investment, the consumer will demand a rising quality of service. Those companies that contribute to it will prosper. Henderson Global Healthcare Unit Trust will invest in such companies.

2. Drugs and Treatment

Today, hundreds of thousands of people around the world are treated by prescription for illnesses which as little as ten years ago would have required hospitalisation. The cost-saving arguments for ever greater investment in research by pharmaceutical companies are compelling. Government regulatory bodies understand well the need for a reasonable return on investment so that funds continue to be available for the next generation of discovery.

Twenty-one years ago two scientists, one British and one American, were awarded the Nobel prize for developments in genetic engineering. Their discovery not only created a potentially huge new industry but led to expressions such as genetic engineering and cloning becoming commonplace. Under laboratory conditions it is possible to clone blood or even skin

Henderson Global Healthcare Unit Trust will be investing in such pioneering areas of the future, as well as in more established pharmaceutical companies-from Japan to the United Kingdom, from Switzerland to North America.

3. Equipment Detached retinae can now be fixed by laser and severed limbs sewn back by micro-surgery. These examples are the most recent public demonstrations of a further medical revolution, this time in the area of equipment manufacture. Again, over a very short period of time, the miraculous has become commonplace and commercial. The blind, by wearing a special vest, can 'see' well enough to assemble micro-circuits; the expectant mother knows more about her unborn child through sonar techniques; and electromagnets scan the body more accurately and safely than any X-ray. Diagnostic equipment continues to evolve as rapidly as pharmaceuticals; the manufacture of artificial joints and limbs becomes ever more sophisticated; recalcitrant fractures can be fused by electromagnetic therapy.

Investing in medical equipment companies can be hazardous. The pace of development is fast and this year's breakthrough can be obsolete next year Investment management skill is vital. The managers of Henderson Global Healthcare Unit Trust believe they have the experience to exercise

4. Support Services

Medical care does not exist as an entity in isolation. Hospitals would soon grind to a half without catering or laundry services, without supplies of materials or clinical laboratory testing services. As expenditure on Healthcare grows so the cost to governments, insurance companies, employers and individuals rises; and the demand is then for greater efficiency. Thus the provision of efficient computer-based facilities is one of the fastest growing areas of the entire Healthcare sector. Admissions, patient records, financial con-trols, stock controls and communication systems all lend themselves to cost-saving computercontrolled handling.

This revolution may not seem so obvious in the UK until you remember the way in which the NHS is increasingly being asked to look at its costs, and to consider privatisation of services, be it for cleaning and catering or for contracting out actual patient operations.

The world of Healthcare is constantly innovative but cannot survive without its basic infrastructure. This need creates the opportunity for

For all the attractions of the Healthcare sector, selecting the investment which will be successful is not easy.

Many of them are based overseas and upto-date information will constantly be ecessary as the rapid pace of development in Healthcare progresses.

The launch of Henderson Global Healthcare Unit Trust provides the first opportunity for unit trust investors to participate directly in this industry. It is the first British unit trust of this kind.

Roll-up funds fear

Investors in those Channel Island rott-up funds which are invested in shorr-dated financial securities should think hard about their investments. The Chencellor has said he will bring in legislation in the next Budget to tax investors in all roll-up

Consumer choice Leeds Permanent Building Society is trying to find out what investors and borrowers really want from their building society. Selected clients are going to be asked how they rate the service they are already receiving, and what Leeds should be offering that it is not. "We have initiated this research because of the wide range of products. which shift out it is a struct the necessary funds for lending, may have complicated the market from the consumers' point of view", Mr John Roberts of Leeds commented.

Leeds might well discover that what building society members really want is for the societies to stop wasting members' money on gimmicks and expensive promotional campaigns.

Tenants buy homes
During 1962 Nationwide Building Society
lent 13.4 per cent of its funds for homebuyers to those purchasing a council house. This accounted for 11,800 loans, worth £149m. Nationwide is expecting an increased demand for property from council tenants in 1984.

Branching out Collecting money boxes to make a model village seems quits an appealing idea until you learn that one of the first two available is a model of a Halifax Building Society branch office. Needless to say, the promoter of this scheme, aimed at attracting young savers, is the Halifax Building Society which is launching its Little Xtra Club. Club members receive what the society describes as "an introductory box of goodies", a 12-page comic three times a year and a birthday and Christmas card, to quality, new members must open a Halifex savings account.

Third and fourth moneyboxes in the series – all of which are obtainable from Halifax branch offices after joining the club – are a church and school. Wity not more Halifax branch offices and give the model vilege an authentic look?

Dial M for money

Phone freeks who are interested in investment can now dial Chase de Vere's Moneyline on 01-673 4343 and obtain brief details of fixed interest investments. The service could be useful if you just want to check that you are getting a competitive rate on your money. But it falls down in that it does not tell you which building society, or which income bond, is offering the best return.

Flexible cover

Recent developments in life assurance have produced a rash of flexible policies designed for the customer who does not really know what sort of life policy he needs. All are hybrid policies – usually a mixture of a wholly life or term contract which pays a lump sum if the policyholder dies, and a savings type

The latest entrant in this field is Merchant Investors with its Universal

Cover Plan, a unit-linked whole life combination. It is a convenient way of providing cover for those who do not want to think too much about life assurance. But it has the disadvantage that it is difficult to work out just how much you are being charged for the life cover and how much of your money is being saved for you.

Card campaign

American Express is going all out to persuade companies to give American Express cards to their sales forces and other expense account employees. The campaign is emphasizing the protection offered the company against misuse by employees. Provided the company takes reasonable precautions, it will not be held liable if the employee goes on an unauthorized spending spree. The big fear of employers is that an employee with a no-limit credit card will set off on a round-the-world trip at the company's expense.

Amex's new "Waiver of Liability" scheme removes this possibility. Amex also believes it is one-up on the competition because it can provide the employee with a personal statement and the company financial controller with an overall statement for all employees.

There must be a whole generation of women who feel they have been brought up by Katharine Whitehorn. When I was a struggling student I read "Cooking In a Bedsitter". Now that I am grappling with mortgages and school fees - not to mention worrying about my pension - she has produced How To Survive Your Money Problems" (Methuen, £3.95), a jolly and helpful guide to family

Miss Whitehorn has grasped the essential point that most of us are less interested in oming as rich as Croesus than in making it through the month without the bailiffs calling or getting a rude reprimand from the bank

There's a lot about insurance. "Worrying about what will happen is one of the worst things about money", she says. AN OPPORTUNITY TO HELP BRITISH BUSINESS GROW

THE BUCKMASTER DEVELOPMENT FUND

(established under the Business Expansion Scheme)

The Government in order to help British business grow has set up the Business Expansion Scheme, which makes tax relief available to private individuals on investments in unquoted companies. Since the investment can be deducted for income tax purposes from the individual's total income, the potential tax benefits, particularly to high rate tax payers, could be substantial.

. However, tax reliefs are not in themselves enough and the successful investor will be the one who identifies companies with growth potential where at some future moment his investment can be realised.

Furthermore, since investing in unquoted companies involves high risk as well as the possibility of large rewards, some individuals may be well advised to consider spreading their risks by participating in a fund through which a number of investments will be made on their behalf.

Buckmaster & Moore has therefore set up The Buckmaster Development Fund to invest in a range of unquoted companies which can demonstrate that with the benefit of additional capital they are capable of profitable expansion.

The fund aims to attract a total of £2,500,000 from private investors in amounts ranging from £2,500 to £40,000.

THIS ADVERTISEMENT DOES NOT CONSTITUTE AN INVITATION TO SUBSCRIBE TO THE FUND.

SUBSCRIPTIONS WILL ONLY BE ACCEPTED ON THE BASIS OF THE MEMORANDUM DESCRIBING THE FUND.

BEFORE ANY INVESTOR SUBSCRIBES TO THE FUND HE SHOULD ENSURE THAT APPROPRIATE PROFESSIONAL ADVICE IS TAKEN. IT SHOULD BE NOTED THAT THE MINIMUM INVESTMENT IS £2,500.

The other curious aspect of National Savings strategy is that there appears to be no urgent need to round up new money National Savings' target for 1983-84 is the same as last year. During the first five months of the 1982-83 fiscal year some £794m was taken in, and this year National Savings' net receipts for the five months ending August 1983 are well above target at £970m.

The building societies are certainly not concerned at the potential competition from the new National Savings bond. A spokesman for the Building Societies Association said: "I don't think it is a major product". But is it worth investing? At 11.5 per cent gross, the equivalent return to a basic rate taxpayer is 8.05 per cent. 3 Save & Prosper funds well-placed to benefit from world economic recovery

COMMODITY SHARE FUND

After years of recession, prospects for commodity producers are much improved. Only the fittest have survived by streamlining their operations and increasing their potential.

As world recovery gathers Fine record momentum they should be among the first to benefit as demand for commodities looks set to outstrip supply in 115.5%. This compares with the short term, leading to markedly higher prices.

For the private investor we believe Save & Prosper Commodity Share Fund offers an excellent way to share in the outstanding prospects for companies engaged in commodity production and marketing.

investment spread As Britain's largest unit trust specialising in commodity shares the Fund offers a truly diversified spread of investment. The current distribution of the Fund by commodity and geographical area is shown opposite.

Over the 5 years to 27th September 1983 the offer price of units has risen by a rise of 93.6% in the FTA All-Share Index over the same period.

ENERGY INDUSTRIES FUND

Demand for energy looks set to increase with world recovery. Shares of companies with a good record of exploration and exploitation are likely to move ahead much faster than energy shares in general.

The key to successful investment now lies in identifying those companies which are efficiently increasing their reserves in the ground, as prices will depend more on future earning potential than on prevailing energy prices.

Launched in 1973, Save & Prosper Energy Industries Fund offers an attractive way of sharing in the success of many such companies. It has performed exceptionally well, with the offer price of units increasing by 221.5% over the 10 years to 27th September 1983. This compares with a 149.4% rise in the FTA All-Share Index companies which have large gas reserves. Although there is a glut at present, the Fund Managers believe that the price is bound to rise and that earnings will move ahead sharply.

Overall the Fund has a higher proportion of money invested in the USA than similar unit trusts. Recent reports that US economic activity is higher than expected have heightened the Fund's prospects and we believe that now is a very good time to invest.

Increasing economic activity worldwide and the prospect of rising prices for natural resources once again focus attention on the key role of exploration. present market conditions

Greater demand for oil and minerals means that new sources of supply must be found. Higher prices will inevitably lead to more exploration activity, which should increase the likelihood of new and successful discoveries.

For the private investor few sectors offer such rapid growth potential as a discovery can multiply share prices within days. The problem is to identify and invest in these companies before such discoveries are made. Save & Prosper

Top-rate taxpayers can 'buy a job'

Electra Risk Capital, part of the Electra Investment Trust group, has announced a Business Expansion Scheme register which aims to offer private premises to train branch staff. investors the opportunity of choosing their own unquoted trading investment.

Since then, it requires the majority of parent BES fund, adapted from its asso bought another 40 shops company directors to be regis- Business Start Up Scheme fund. established in 1981. That fund spreads the risk of investment under BES over a number of investments. It particularly appeals to small investors who cannot put up the maximum £200,000 five-year investment and thus can not afford to risk losing their money on just one

> The new fund is aimed at those high-rate taxpayers who might wish to choose their own investment and possibly be-come involved with the company in which they invest.
> According to Mr Gordon

> Dean, Managing Director of Electra Risk, members of the register will complete a questionaire detailing their preferences and the amount they wish to invest each year. Then a list of prospectuses relating to pro-posed issues of shares in unquoted companies will be sent to them or their financial advisers.

Mr Dean claims that the BES has generated a new stimulus to investments and as a result Electra expects far more companies to seek new capital from Electra has £20m in two approved funds under BES. The first, the revemped Start-Up Scheme, has £8.3m invested in 32 companies. The second Risk Fund, established in April and pure BES, has £2m invested in eight companies and has an-other £4m committed.

A new register of potential investors in firms seeking finance or their expertise.

This is a particularly important, but little realised point. Expansion Scheme has Electra Risk already runs a R secondary "bny your-les fund, adapted from its self a job" appeal for redundant executives.

> To those investors concerned that the register is a dumping ground for prospects which the funds turn down, Mr Dean responded that the funds have a maximum investment of £750,000 to £1m and when a company needs more than that, the opportunity is shared between the funds and register. The register appeals also to high-rate taxpayers who want to exercise individual choice and may wish to involve themselves

Many prospectuses will arrive from people with little management or financial expertise. They often do not realise that further tranches of cash are required over a five-year period Family Money has been during trading growth and are finding out how it sometimes not experienced enough to cope with a sudden, sharp rise in demand.

Mr Dean conceded the point. Electra, he said, has often to inject managerial expertise to protect the interests of its investors, and this can some-times hold back a planned investment while suitable candidiates are recruited.

This could prove attractive to those executives made redun-dant who have a cash sum or may wish to draw resources from their pension funds. In other words, buy yourself a job. Mr Dean also pointed out that the concentration on BES should not exclude those pursuing a pure Start-Up. There are many millions of pounds available in varying schemes within the City, but not many major funds have found it as easy as they had originally thought to attract companies seeking investment. Indeed, there appears a large gulf between the City and small entrepreneurs.

Such a view does not capture the spirit of the Government's intention in establishing BES. Electra, he added, felt that there was a useful equilibrium between those seeking funds and those wishing to invest

RUGBY UNION: TOUR PARTY IN TROUBLE AS THEY PREPARE FOR THE SERVICEMEN

Ill-luck strikes twice as the Canadians start their campaign

By David Hands, Rugby Correspondent

.It is to be hoped that the misfortune suffered by the Canadians even before their tour has begun, does not pursue them round the country in the way that injuries trod on the heels of the Zimbabweans. Training yesterday for their opening game, against the Combined Services at Portsmouth today, the Canadian wing. Haw-thorn, broke a finger and returned home after three days in England.

Their most experienced forward, Dukelow, has had 20 stitches inserted in a knee wound and will be mavailable until next Saturday. It is among the tight forwards that the Canadians have the least experience, since they have been forced to leave behind thre quality locks, Hindson, Fowler and the former Cardiff Player, de Goede, who returned after a year away from the game too late to tour. Of the side that faces the Services, three have played in Britain before, Delaney, the former England colt, Schiefler, the former England Schools cap and Stewart, twice captian of Cambridge University against Cxford. But lose, Ireland surely will, and 4 in two hours and 47 minutes and Christopher Mottram took what will happen then to a nation with only two players on the professional circuit? There are no outstanding juniors and, as Peter Minnis, aged 21, and one of the two only an hour and 33 minutes to subdue Ricardo Acuna 6-4, 6-3, 6-3. The first match began on a grey, overcast morning in a stadium embellished by specially installed flowers and hoardings advertising four sponsors. The grass court was soft enough to produce low bounces but nevertheless gave the players just enough time to punctuate two-shot or three-shot rallies with more enduring samples of the lambent tactical patterns peculiar to grass-court tennis.

Fillol and Lloyd were striking protagonists. This is an era in which a scruffy petulance is far too prevalent. Yet here were two men who might be typecast as sporting heroes; hand-some clean-limbed chaps with proud bearings, tidily smart clothing, and the manners appropriate to that old cliche, 'a sportsman and a gentleman' If that sounds effusively oldfashioned, never mind: we have had more than enough gush about rowdies masquerading as exemplars. Equally to the point Fillol and Lloyd are the kind of men who make decisions without going into committee. They get on with the job. They seek to win points rather than wait for the other man to lose them. They jerked each other about like marionettes, with everything depending on fast reactions, racket control, and the ability to marry the ball to the lines without undue risk of

In the first set Fillol could not find any rhythm with his for the official Grand Prix service and Lloyd was seeing circuit.

Britain looked safe for an- the ball so quickly and clearly await his pleasure. He used the lob well too - but Fillel expected that, because Mark Cox. Britain's adviser on strategy knows Fillol's game well Lloyd was quick, too; and he won five consecutive games. Fillol, at 37 the oldest of

Davis Cup players, was playing his first singles in this compe. tition since 1979, when he decided the hard work and responsibility could better be shouldered by younger men. But in the second set he found his touch, was unreasonably fast for his years, and (from Lloyd's point of view anyway) took the ball disconcertingly early.

Fillol was twice a break up in that second set, but lost it. It seemed that this pattern might be repeated in the third but he broke service for a third time after a thrilling sequence of four deuce games. During a 15-minute interval they change shirts, like male models dashing to the wings, and returned to the catwalk in sudden sunshine.

To change the analogy, Lloyd was the sharper of the two when they came out of their corners after the interval between rounds.

Acuna, who reached the last 32 at both Wimbledon and Flushing Meadow, is a quick springy little man with a headband a South American version, if you like, of Chis Lewis who was runner-up at Wimbledon. The difference is that whereas Lewis's eyebrows tend to be raised (he can never believe what is happening). Acuna's tend to be lowered, so intense is his concentration. Mottram, a large man with feet to match, seems to be permanently afflicted by a bowed head and restless eyes. Before serving, he plants himself so firmly that it seems nothing but a seismic disturbance could shift him. Mottram played as exemplary, businesslike match.

Paul Hutchins, Britain's manager, said later that it was a long time since he had seen Mottram play a better match on grass: and Hutchins was right. What a pity it is - though one's sympathies are largely with him that Mottram has lost his taste and broke his service to take the match in just over two hours and a half. Noah had not played on grass since the 1981 New South Wales Open, but quickly found his form on Sydney's White City centre count and was in control throughour the match apart from a brief period in

However Time Charter's famous burst of finishing speed has never been more in evidence than it was inn her defeat of Diamond Shoal and Sun Princess at Ascot, And Billy Newnes's lack of big race experience will be more than compensated by his knowledge of the filly.

Time Charter is ideally drawn at 12. The field have the race straight for the first furlong or so and those drawn in the high numbers nearest the rails have a definite advantage as they race for the first turn. Sun Princess and Diamond Shoal will break from stalls five and six.

A dream start for young Shoemark

By John Karter

Consideration of the consideration of the constitution of the cons

While others dreamt of riding to glory in the Art de Triomphe or Cambridgeshire, a small fresh faced jockey was savouring a triumph in a relatively humble apprentice race at Newmarket yesterday that must have seemed every bit as gratifying. Ian Shoemark, just turned 17, was having his first ride in public when he won the Polycell Stakes by a street on Ian Balding's Insular. What made that victory even more special, though, was the fact that the colours Shoemark was wearing were and gold of Her Majesty the Queen.

royal trainer, thinks highly inc his young apprentice, but as he pointed out ruefully. Shoemerk is already having weight problems so his future may lie in following father's hoof prints over the jumps. Young Shoemark's hero is one Lester Piggott, who showed that he too knows a thing or two about the riding game with victories on Chelkov and Alleging in the two divisions of the Westley Maiden Stakes Chelkov area, who first Stakes. Chelkov won the first division with some authority from Zenjebeel, but of the two Alleging, a son of the dual Arc winner Alleged, looked the better long term prospect.

Henry Cecil the trainer, apparently regarded Alleging as almost useless until about a month ago when he started to improve almost magically. Yesterday, starting at the most un-Cecil like price of 10-1. Alleging sprinted away from his 26 rivals most impressively, in a faster time than Chelkov. We must wait until next season to catch another glimpse of Alleging, but it should be worth the wait because he could well be top class. prospect be top class.

Jenkin rules out ending of rates

By Philip Webster Political Reporter

Mr Patrick Jenkin, Secretary of State for the Environment, who faces criticism at the Conservative Party conference over the Government's alleged failure to honour its commitment to reform the rating system, has said that the Government has decided that the rates should be retained for the foresceable future.

Making clear his readiness to face his critics head-on, Mr Jenkin said that the Government would put the rating system back on a stable footing with its proposals to curb highspending authorities, with a back-up power to cap the rates, to abolish the GLC and the metropolitan authorities, and to require councils to consult business representatives before

The general tenor of reso-utions tabled by Conservative associations for the conference is that those proposals are madequate and that a more drastic reform is necessary.

But Mr Jenkin, in a speech to the Rating and Valuation Association's conference in Southport, said that the enevances underlying the hos-tility to the rates must be redressed. Rates would be retained.

He then set out the Government's objections to the various cliematives proposed: A poll tax would require significant exemptions and be nard to enforce. It would need the compulsory registration of all who were liable to pay.

A sales tax would be complex and the yield difficult o predict. It could distort valuerns of shopping and imose new burdens on retailers.

3 A local income tax would be recesive to run and increase the marginal rate of income tax. We would still face much the same problems over excess spending. Central government would still have to help authorities with low resources and high expenditure needs.

Some form of equalization scheme would still be required." Recipe for reform, page 8

Chukka or two to win a sultan's ear

From a Special Correspondent

With the call to prayer the Sultan's friends are cities echoing across waters speckled polo players or enthusiasis of with the reflected lights of the sport. houses rising on stilts out of the river, the setting of the British High Commissioner's house in Bandar Seri Begawan is close to perfection. For the past few weeks it has been the focal point for a modest revival in the fortunes of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, with the agreements with Brunei, buffeted remorsely since the Falklands War and the departure of Lord Carrington as Foreign Secretary, an event which many an FCO man believes is the root cause of the hard diplomatic row which Britain now has to hoe. Even at the height of empire it is doubtful that BSB, as the Brunei capital is known locally, was exactly a hotbed of diplomatic activity. It was more a post, perhaps, for those in need of a sinecure or the lesser lights in the Foreign Office. But dealing with potentates can be an un-comfortable business, as recent high commissioners in Brunei have been reminded. After the abrupt departure of the previous incumbent. Mr Francis Cornish has now been installed as High Com-missioner. Mr Cornish, tall and as energetic and enthusiastic as though he had just become Ambassador to Washington, could scarcely be better qualified for the job of winning the ear of Sultan Sir Muda Hassanal Bolkiah Muizzadin Waddaulah. A former assistant private secretary to the Prince of Wales Mr Cornish, like the Sultan, went to Sandhurst and has a liking for polo, which is the ruler's passion.

It was no suprise, therefore, when Buckingham Palace announced that Prince Charles would represent the Queen at Brunei's independence celebrations on February 23.

That celebration is intended for foreign guests while the December 31 affair will be a purely national one. No doubt there will be a chukka or two of polo played during the festivities, many of

Indeed the Sultan's enthus asm is such that it is not unknown for one of the Bing 737s of the national airline Royal Brunei, to be commandeered to fly a batch of them off to a tournament. But they are used to luxury and it is said that their quarters adjacent to the new palace will be air-conditioned.

Such dazzling contrasts in life in the more mundane parts of South-East Asia are fairly common in Brunei which has a car population of some 80.000 vehicles for a human population of 190

While the Royal Brune Malay Regiment gets familiar with the electronics of the British Rapier anti-aircraft missile system, which can aim and fire the weapons system even at night, residents of Bandar Seri Begawan are only now beginning to enjoy the benefits of traffic light. Recent mornings in the capital have seen a group of intense voung Bruneians carefully timing their duration with Assisting the men with the stopwatches were young Britons, but in other instances Brunei has been going through the ritual of showing how hite it needs its former colonial masters.

But there is still the Churchill Museum, a familiar statue of the hunched figure of Sir Winston in front of it Inside his career is traced in dioramas. It is a story that must leave modern young Bruneians a little bit nonplussed - not least because the inscription at the foot of the statue deals with blood, toil tears and sweat.

This is a strange exhortation in a state with £8 billion in foreign reserves which could most probably stop its oil and natural gas production tomorrow and live off the interest on its investments for the foresee

If tomatoes have to be removed to make way for chrysanthemums that have been standing outside, cut them down, or if in pots, lay them on some straw in a cold frame or cover them with clockes to ripen up the last of the fruits. The same applies to outdoor plants. Or pick the fruits and place them in a warm room in a bowl with ripening tomatoes.
